PREFACE. (THIRD EDITION.)

The new edition of an ancient classical work rarely happens to be a mere reprint of the old. The editor has to revise the text in the light of the new material available to him, scrutinize the notes and illumine the introduction in the light of latest researches regarding the author and his works. It is his pleasing duty to bring the work up to date. So the present edition of the Mudrārākshasa differs from the previous ones in several important points. The text has been subjected to a searching examination with the help of two new manuscripts procured by Dr. N. G. Sardesai, the enterprizing Manager of the Oriental Book Agency, Poona, who has been taking great interest in the publication. They prove to be over one hundred and fifty years old. They were copied by the celebrated Marathi poet, Moropant. So I call them Moro manuscripts in the notes. Of the two, one gives the text of the Mudrārākshasa. Beginning with the words श्रीगणेशाय नमः । श्रीरामाय नमः । धन्या० it concludes thus:- मुद्राराक्षसं समाप्तम् । मयूरेश्वरपन्तेन श्रीमद्रामाङ्ग-जन्मना । गसिकखान्ततोषाय लिखितं नाटकं मुदा ॥ १ ॥ श्रीराम जय, राम जय, जय राम । तारणे चैत्रेऽसिते प्रतिपदि दिवा यामेऽन्तर्ये । This is followed overleaf by ॐ प्राची संध्या काचिदन्तर्निशायाः प्रज्ञादेष्टजनश्रीरपूर्वा । वक्त्री वेदान् भानवे वाजिवक्त्रा वागीशाख्या वासुदेवस्य मूर्तिः ॥ १ ॥ प्रयतोऽज्ञानसंदोह-ध्वान्तध्वंसनकर्मठम् । नमामि तुरगग्रीवं हरिं सारखतप्रदम् ॥ २ ॥ श्लोकद्वयमिदं प्रातरष्टाविंशतिवारकम् । नरस्य पठतो निल्यं सर्वा विद्या प्रसिध्यति ॥ ३ ॥ It has 56 leaves in all. The other manuscript contains a Sanskrit rendering of the Prakrit passages of the drama. It is the work of Keśava Upādhyāya, popularly known as Keśav

Pādhye, the preceptor of poet Moropant. It opens with the introductory verse नत्वा श्रीमद्बाणेशस्य चरणौ सङ्कुरोरपि । कुरुते केशवो मुद्राराक्षसप्राकृतच्छविम् ॥ and ends in the concluding verse अनालोच्य द्याख्यां प्रतिमनधिगमयापि च परां विशुद्धां मूलस्य स्वमतिपरिमाणावधि कृतः । श्रमोऽयं तं सन्तो निजहृदि विभाव्याथ विबुधाः कदाचिद् व्यस्तं स्याद् विगत-मपि वा पूरयत तत् ॥. The द्याख्या, here alluded to, is the commentary of Dhūṇḍirāja published in the Bombay Sanskrit Series. The colophon runs thus :— इति श्रीमद्बाबूरायापर पर्याय-केशवोपाध्यायकल्पितायां मुद्राराक्षसप्राकृतच्छायायां सप्तमोऽङ्कः ॥ १ ॥ शाके गुणाष्ट-भूपाल(१६८३)मिते वर्षे अट्ठौ शुचौ । वदिपक्षस्य पञ्चम्यां भौमे निशि च वासरे ॥ रचिता केशवोनेयं मुद्राराक्षसदीपिका । पुरो धृता चेत् सर्वत्र भवेत् प्राकृतदीपिका ॥ श्री केशवोपाध्यायप्रियशिष्य-रामात्मज-मयूरेश्वरपन्तस्य मुद्राराक्षसनाटकप्राकृतच्छाया । श्रीरामचन्द्र लोकेश करुणार्णव भूपते । चरणौ शरणं तेऽत्र मम श्रीजानकीपते ॥ १ ॥ रामाय जगदाद्याय सीतानाथाय विष्णवे । नमोऽस्तु प्रणतानन्दहेतवे भवसेतवे ॥ २ ॥ राम राम रघूतंस कामसुन्दरविग्रह । रक्ष रक्षःपतिघंसदक्ष दक्षम्भसेवित ॥ ३ ॥ श्रीराम जय, राम जय, जय राम । श्रीरामो जयति ॥. There are the following lines overleaf :— कीर्तिस्ते धनिका धनं मधुरिमा तत्राधर्मणा सुधा शीतांशुः प्रतिभूत्तदर्थनकृते सैषा दिवं धावति । सा लीना तव वाचि राम नृपते चन्द्रो निरुद्धोऽध्वनि शङ्कातङ्कभृदंशुकावृतसुनक्तं दिवि ब्राम्यति ॥. In the middle of the page is written मुद्राराक्षसनाटकप्राकृतच्छाया. Below it is the verse ढक्काशतसहस्राणि भेरीशतशतानिच । एकदा यत्र हन्यन्ते कोणाधातः स उच्यते ॥. The total number of leaves is 14. Both the manuscripts are throughout very legibly written and are well preserved. They contain on an average 24 lines per leaf and 30 letters per line. The characters are devanāgarī. The manuscript of the Chhāya has a few lacunæ, while that of the text is complete. The collation of these Moro manuscripts has helped to recover a number of happy readings, which are adopted in the text. Conjectural emendations are also made in those parts of the play where the text proved to be corrupt. In these cases the readings found in editions M.T.H. are shown under numerical figures in English at the bottom of the page below footnotes giving principal variant readings.

Ancient Indian history may be expected to shed light on the Mudrākshasa and to interpret rightly the account of the Mauryan Revolution given in the play. But the record of the period has little to say about the great political event. The Mudrākshasa, therefore, has to be its own interpreter. For the purpose of the proposed interpretation a correct rendering of the text critically settled is a desideratum. I have therefore gone over the translation and revised it; and I may be permitted to say with a degree of confidence that it will help to unravel the intricacies of the plot and facilitate the work of interpreting it in a true historical spirit.

With a view to elucidate and explain the text fully the notes are considerably enlarged. Most of the changes made in the Sanskrit original are commented upon and obscurities cleared up, leaving little to be desired by way of criticism.

Of the several additions and alterations in the introduction the one calling for special notice is the reference to देवीचन्द्रगुप्त, another historical play of Viśākhadatta. The few extracts from it found in works on alambāru point unequivocally to Rāmagupta as the successor of Samudragupta Parākramāditya. After a very brief reign he seems to have abdicated in favour of his younger brother Chandragupta II, otherwise known as Vikramāditya and Sāhasāṅka. Epigraphic and numismatic records are sadly defective and provokingly silent about Rāmagupta. But for the mention in the extracts from the play, his very name would have been forgotten. I have copied these extracts and given them in an appendix. They will be interesting to students of Sanskrit Literature and of the history of India as also of Gujarat.

INTRODUCTION.

Viśākhadatta, the author of the Mudrārākshasa, belonged to a family of the ruling class bearing the nominal ending Datta. The Dattas were administrative heads. Vaṭeśvaradatta, the grandfather of the poet, was Sāmanta, and Bhāskaradatta who succeeded him rose to a still higher gubernatorial position, being styled Mahārāja. He was the father of Viśākhadatta¹.

The powerful ruler under whom the Dattas attained to eminence is said to have saved India from the barbaric tyranny of the Mlechchhas that had spread over the land like waters of the deluge. Who this ruler was, is a matter of dispute. The drama concludes with his name which is variously written Chandraguptah, Axantivarmā, Dantivarmanā, Rantivarmanā, Rantivarmanāh and Rantavarmā in manuscripts. Of these six names the last two are corruptions of Rantivarmanā which itself has a suspicious look; for the name is nowhere to be traced². Very likely Pārthivorantivarmanā is a blunder for Pārthivovantivarmanā or Pārthivodantivarmanā. Mr. A. Rangaswāmi Saraswati, B.A., vouches for the correctness of *Dantivarmanā*³ which, he says, is the reading in many old and reliable manuscripts of the Mudrārākshasa, examined in Malabar. Dantivarman, he adds, seems to be identical with the Pallava sovereign of the name who ruled about 720 A.C.⁴. Did this king, one would ask, save the land from the tyranny of the Mlechchhas? Who were these Hūṇas of the south? Did he so much favour the Vaishṇava cult, that by way of compliment he came to be identified with Vishṇu of the Boar Incarnation? The Pallavas were mostly worshippers of Śiva. Are these kings known to have patronized a Datta family? The learned epigraphist is silent on these points. So I pass on to the reading Chandraguptah.

² The late Mr. Telang was the first to reject it; see his introduction to the Mudrārākshasa, B. S. S.

³ See the Journal of the Mythic Society, April, 1923, pp. 686-687.

It is the one adopted by Prof. S. Ray, M.A.¹. He identifies this king with Chandragupta² II (375–413 A.C.) of the Gupta dynasty, ‘who overthrew the Hūṇas and other Mlechchhas and wrested from them the territories they had seized in the Punjab.’ I do not know if the land of the five rivers was then under the Hūṇa rule. Though the predatory expeditions of the trans-frontier Hūṇas date as early as the third century of the Christian era, the occupation of the Punjab by these barbarians is later than 460 A.C. They effected a lodgment there in 465 A.C., and by the close of the century extended their rule southwards as far as Malwa. The beginning of Hūṇa sovereignty in India dates half a century after the end of the reign of Chandragupta II. Dhunḍirāja, a commentator of the Mudrārākshasa, also accepts the reading *Chandraguptah*³; but he takes it to denote another historical personage. According to him this Chandragupta is no other than the Maurya Emperor Chandragupta, the hero of the play. His view is not tenable. For the allusion to the invasion of the Mauryan territories by the Mlechchhas sounds very inappropriate in the mouth of Rākshasa, as it was undertaken at his instigation and under his lead. Moreover, the closing benedictory stanza does not form a part of the play proper which terminates in the Upasāñhāra or Kāvyasāñhāra section of the compleutive division (Nirvahaṇasāñdhī). It belongs to the Praśasti section. The benediction is, in the majority of cases, general. At times it refers to the then ruling sovereign as in the instance before us, in four⁴ of the plays of Bhāsa, in the Chandakausika of Ārya Kshemīśvara and in the Vasumatīparinaya of Jagannātha. Any reference to the characters of the play in the praśasti which is significantly called Bharatavākyā is out of question. In order to make the text conform to the commentary of Dhunḍirāja which he publishes, the late Mr. Telang adopts this reading. But in his learned Introduction

he is notably inclined to give preference to the other reading Avantivarmanā; and of the two Avantivarmans known to Indologists, one of Kāśmira¹ and the other of Kanauj, he identifies the patron of the poet's family with the latter². He connects him with the later Guptas in their wars with the White Hūṇas³ that are the Mlechchhas referred to in the last benedictory stanza of the play⁴. I agree with the learned scholar, differing only in one particular. The allies of the Maukhara kings of Kanauj in their wars with the Hūṇas were not the later Guptas, but the kings of Thanesar. This will be clear from a résumé of the history of the times that I give below.

The Hūṇa empire founded by Toramāṇa and Mihirakula was wrecked by the crushing defeat of the latter in the battle of Daśapura in 528 A.C.⁵. From the wreck sprang up a number of independent states. There was the Hūṇa kingdom of the Punjab with its seat of government in Śākala (modern Sialkot). There were also the Gurjara principalities of Western Rajputānā and Eastern Gujarāt. They were a source of trouble and unrest to all and particularly to the states of Thanesar and Kanauj. Though originally vassals of the imperial Guptas of Magadha, these

kingdoms had latterly become independent. The rulers of Kanauj who were known as Maukharas, or Maukharis took advantage of the weakness of their former masters and seized their territories as far as Faizabad, Shahabad and Asirgad¹. The powerful Maukhara kings Isānavarman and Sarvavarman wrestled with the Hūṇas and defeated them on many battle-fields, A.C. 543 and 552². In these bloody wars it is presumed that kings of Thanesar sided with their Maukhara neighbours and fought their battles which were their own too. And their political alliance led to an alliance by marriage in which the sister of Ādityavardhana of Thanesar was joined in wedlock with Prince Susthitavarman of Kanauj.

Some time after this swarms of Hūṇas from Bactria poured into India. For the Hūṇa empire on the Oxus was wiped away by the Turks with the assistance of Khushru Noshirvan of Persia in 565 A.C. The deluge of the Hūṇas threatened to sweep away all ancient political landmarks. Reinforced by the new-comers the Hūṇas of Śākala became a terrible menace to the State of Thanesar. Fortunately for it there was at the helm a very brave and enterprising chief Prabhākaravardhana, son of Ādityavardhana. He took the field against the Hūṇas and Gurjaras, aided by his veteran general Siṁhanāda who had fought the Hūṇas in the reign of the late King. In this war of self-preservation his cousin Avantivarman of Kanauj co-operated with him and shared the glory of having saved India from the Hūṇas who fled at their approach like deer. Viśākhadatta, consequently magnifies Avantivarman for rescuing the land from the deluge of the Mlechchhas, and Bāṇa glorifies Prabhākaravardhana for driving out the Hūṇas.

In the year which was signalized by the conquest of the cis-frontier Hūṇas, a son was born to Prabhākaravardhana who was named Rājyavardhana¹. This event enables us to fix the date of the brilliant conquest, which I take to be 582 A.C. Two decades after that Prabhākaravardhana married his daughter Princess Rājyaśri to Grahavarman of Kanauj² who had succeeded his father Avantivarman in 600 A.C.³. This was the second marriage alliance among the royal families of Thanesar and Kanauj. About that time the trans-frontier Hūṇas had commenced their raids. They lived far away in the inaccessible mountain passes of Afghanistan, whence they swooped on the plains of Hindustan. Prabhākaravardhana ordered his son Rājyavardhana to track the barbarians to their dens and destroy them. The Prince who was a young man of twenty-four, gallantly undertook to do it. He crossed the Hindu Kush and surprised them in their mountain fastness of Bamian⁴. Overpowered by odds that surrounded them the Hūṇas were simply annihilated. Thus perished the last vestige of Hūṇa supremacy which once extended from the Oxus to the Damaṅgaṅgā. It was in the year 606 A.C.

The last digression is made on purpose to show that from 543 to 606 A.C., there was a life-and-death struggle with the Hūṇas and in that continual struggle the principal actors were the rulers of Kanauj and Thanesar. No other contemporary chief moved a finger to get rid of the foreigners. The cousins Avantivarman and Prabhākaravardhana had a common enemy in the Hūṇas. So I feel almost certain that they made a joint campaign against them.

⁴ As stated in the Harshacharita Rājyavardhana had to cross Tushāragiri in his expedition against the Hūṇas. Bāṇa speaks of the very long distance of it from Gandhamādāna which is a peak of the Himalayas near Kedarnath. So I take the goal of the expedition to be beyond the Hindukush, and as Bamian was the only Hūṇa settlement in that region, I understand that the expedition was directed against that place in the mountains of Afghanistan. The line

उत्थाय द्विषतो विजित्य वसुव्रां कृत्वा प्रजानां प्रियम् of the Banskhara and Madhubina copper-plates of Emperor Harsha alludes to this memorable expedition of his elder brother. For fuller information the reader should refer to the introduction of my Gujarati homometrical translation of Harsha's Priyadarśanā ordinarily known as Priyadarśikā.

Since Viśākhadatta alludes to Avantivarman's conquest of the Hūnas which was completed in 582 A.C., the dramatist may be safely put down in the second half of the sixth century.

To return to Avantivarman, the fourth stanza of the prologue to Bāṇa's Kādambarī pointedly refers to the great honour paid to Bhachchu by the Maukharas. Bhānuchandra, the commentator of the Kādambarī, notes that this Bhachchu was the guru of Bāṇa¹. The latter was a court-poet of Emperor Harṣa of Thanesar, son of Prabhākaravardhana and brother of Rājyavardhana. So Bhachchu was, in all likelihood, a contemporary of Prabhākaravardhana and Avantivarman. Since the Maukharas are said to have worshipped his feet, he must have held a post of honour such as that of Vidyāpati at the court of the Maukhara king of Kanauj. Avantivarman thus appears to be a patron of learning too. Viśākhadatta commends the kindness of the king unto his dignitaries ; and he is, perhaps, speaking from personal experience. For, it was Avantivarman who raised his father from the dignity of Sāmantā to that of Mahārāja². The Maukharas belonged to the far-famed Lunar Line of the Epic age³. The late Dr. Peterson speaks of them as the patrons of the great image of Harihara at the place of that name⁴. The Śivite dramatist is, perhaps,

I take भस्तु, भर्त्यु, भश्चु and भर्त्यु to be different Sanskrit equivalents of a Prākṛit original भच्चु. The variant भर्त्यु is a clerical error for भच्चु. भच्चु was a poet. His verses are found in सुभा, शा. प., स. क.

respecting this partiality of theirs when he invokes Śiva and Viṣṇu simultaneously in the Third Act of the play¹.

The reference to Avantivarman's victory over the Hūṇas in the closing stanza leads me to conjecture that the Mudrā-rākshasa was composed in or about 585 A.C., when the happy memory of the joint campaign of the cousins Avantivarman and Prabhākaravardhana was fresh in the minds of the people. Prior to this its author must have served in an outlying Himalayan district subject to Kanauj. This I infer from the knowledge he displays with regard to the situation of the Parvatadeśa, the kingdom of Malayaketu, which he makes conterminous with Malayadeśa on the east, Kulūta on the south and Kāsmīra on the west².

The Mudrā-rākshasa is the only play of Viśākhadatta that has come down to us. He appears to have written two other plays which are both lost. One of them is देवीचन्द्रगुप्त. Like the Mudrā-rākshasa it is a historical play composed very likely in six or seven acts³. It deals with the conquest of Saurāshṭra by the Guptas. King Rāmagupta of the imperial Gupta dynasty, in a war with the Śaka king⁴ of Giripura, happens to fall in the hands of the enemy who sets him free on condition of giving his queen Dhruvadevi in ransom. Filled with resentment at the base demand, Prince Chandragupta beseeches his brother Rāmagupta to send him in disguise to the enemy's city in place of the Queen, that he may wipe away the gross insult to the family by slaying its author. But the king who loves his younger brother tenderly, refuses to do so. He thereupon manages to put his plan into execution without his brother being privy to it. Received as

² This is to be inferred from the proposal of the partition of the kingdom of Malayaketu made by the rulers of Malayadeśa, Kulūta and Kāsmīra in the fabricated letter of the fifth act of the play.

⁴ The name of the Śaka King is Rudrasimha III; see V. Smith's Early History of India. He is the last of the Mahūkshatrapas of Saurāshṭra.

Dhruvadevī, he finds easy admission to the palace where he meets the Śaka king and murders him. He then effects his escape, safe in the guise of a maniac, only to come back at the head of the imperial forces and take the fort by storm. The play is named देवीचन्द्रगुप्त after the adventure of Chandragupta in the disguise of Queen Dhruvadevī¹.

It is much to be deplored that the play is lost. There are quotations from it in नाथदर्पण and शूक्लारप्रकाश². The latter refers to Chandragupta's adventure in the following terms :— स्त्रीविषेणिहृतश्चन्द्रगुप्तः शत्रोः स्कन्धावारं गिरिपुरं³ शकपतिवधायागमत्। There is a similar reference to it in Bāṇa's हर्षचरित⁴ which further states that Chandragupta was a Gupta prince. Commenting on the passage Saṅkara tells us that it was Dhruvadevī, the wife of Chandragupta's brother, whom the Śaka king demanded to gratify his passion⁵. Sāgaranandin also is familiar with the play ;

¹ The Prince, by his intrepidity and bravery in the enterprize, earned the glorious epithets of साहस्राङ् and विक्रमादित्य, and succeeded to the throne as Chandragupta the Second. When Chandragupta was crowned in the Junagadh camp on Rāmagupta's abdication in his favour, a brother of his in Pāṭaliputra seized the throne and the imperial treasure. In the war of succession which ensued Chandragupta slew his rival and recovered the throne and the treasure. This I gather from stanza 48 of the Sanjan Plates of the Rāshtrakūṭa King Amoghavarsha I, dated Śaka Samvat 793 (i.e., A.C. 871), given below :— हत्वा भ्रातरमेव राज्यमहरद् देवीं (Read द्रव्यं) च दनिस्ततो लक्ष्म कोटिमलेखयत् किल कलौ दाता (Read दत्तं) स गुप्तान्यवः । येनात्याजि तनु (Read ननु) स्वराज्यमसकृद्बात्यार्थकैः (Read वाक्येर्थके) का कथा हीस्तस्योच्चति (Read हीस्तस्याजनि) राघूरूपतिलको दातेति कीर्तवर्षिपि ॥ The emendations are conjectural. For the original the reader is referred to Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XVIII,

for he mentions उन्मत्तचन्द्रगुप्त which is evidently the title of the fifth act¹ of it.

The other lost play of Viśākhadatta remains nameless for the present. While ransacking Sanskrit anthologies for verses by Viśākhadatta not found in the Mudrārākshasa, I came across a single stanza of his in the Saduktikaranāmrīta². It runs as under:— रामोऽसौ भुवनेषु विकमगुणीर्यातः प्रसिद्धं परामस्मद्भास्यविपर्ययाद् यदि परं देवो न जानाति तम् । बन्दीवैष्ण यशांसि गायति मरुद् यस्मिक्काणाहतथेर्णीभूतविशालतालभिवरोद्धीर्णैः स्वरैः सप्तभिः ॥ It is, in all likelihood, addressed by Vibhishāṇa to Rāvaṇa. Its very form betrays that it belongs to a play. It is at the same time clear that the plot is taken from the Rāmāyaṇa. Equally clear is Viśākhadatta's authorship of the play, as the stanza is quoted under his name.

¹ See Prof. S. Levi's Paper relating to the finds of नाथ्यदर्पण and नाथ्यलक्ष्मरत्नकोश. He there questions the historicity of देवीचन्द्रगुप्त. For Rāmagupta is altogether an unfamiliar name. It does not occur in the genealogical table of the imperial Guptas; nor is there any epigraphic or numismatic record in support of the existence of a Gupta king bearing that name. I submit, however, with much deference, that the rule of Rāmagupta might have been too brief and inconspicuous to be separately noticed. There is nothing to prove that Chandragupta the Second was specially appointed by Samudragupta to succeed him as the latter had been by his father according to stanza 4 of the Allahabad Stone Pillar Inscription of Samudragupta which runs as follows:— आर्यो ही (Read आयाही) त्युपगुह्य भावपिशुनैरुत्कर्णितै रोमभिः सम्येषूच्छुसितेषु तुल्यकुलज (Read जैर) न्लानाननोद (Read ननैर) वीक्षितः । क्लेहव्याकुलितेन बाष्पगुरुणा तत्त्वेक्षिणा चक्षुषा यः पित्राभिहितो निरीक्ष्य निखिलां पाद्येवमूर्वामिति ॥ If the attribute तत्परिगृहीत of the Gupta Inscription No. 4 and No. 15 did really imply such a time-honoured practice of selection, it should have been with greater propriety applied to Samudragupta as borne out by the just quoted verse 4 of the Gupta Inscription No. 1. I suspect that, placed between two mighty emperors Samudragupta and Chandragupta II, Rāmagupta was forgotten. It is only the drama देवीचन्द्रगुप्त that keeps green his memory.

In the Subhāshitāvali there are two anushṭubh verses ascribed to Viśākhadeva¹. Dr. Peterson identifies him with the author of the Mudrārākshasa. The variant in the prologue of the play in some of the manuscripts might have induced the Doctor to take the two to be identical. To me the author of the anushṭubh verses appears to be different from the author of the play. For Datta is the distinctive nominal ending, somewhat like the avatāraka of Nāgars, of the family of the dramatist.

What further information about the author can be gleaned from his work, may be summed up in a few sentences. He was well-versed in Grammar and Dramaturgy. He seems to have read भरतनाव्यशास्त्र. He had studied closely the Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya and the Dandanīti of Uśanas. In Logic he belonged to the school of Gotama whose Nyāyasūtra was his favourite study. He was well acquainted with the works of Bhāsa, Kālidāsa and Bhāravi². He had a considerable familiarity with the Sainhitā school of Jyotisha¹. He was well affected towards Buddhism, but bore a dislike to Jainism, in common with others of the age.

From the poet and the patron let us turn to the play. The Mudrārākshasa is a drama of politics. All actions and movements are made to serve political ends ; and notions of right and wrong are subordinated to the fulfilment of a political purpose. Domestic ties, too, assume the air of political partizanship ; and the tender play of womanly love bears the stern aspect of duty. Thus, a dying father accompanies his parting embrace not with blessings to his sons, but with the political watchword of devotion to the cause ; and a fond wife prepares herself for self-immolation on the funeral pile of her husband not from despair and despondency, but from a sense of fellowship in weal and woe. Social relations also undergo a similar change. The friendships formed by Induśarman, Bhāgurāyaṇa and Siddhārthaka with Rākshasa, Malayaketu and Śakaṭadāsa respectively are political friendships.

Judged by the western canons of criticism the play is remarkable for its unity of action. This is ever kept in view without being made unduly prominent. Professor Weber observes that it may be difficult in the whole range of dramatic literature to find a more successful illustration of the rule². All lines of action converge to one focus, all schemes are directed to one object, namely, the conciliation of Rākshasa. From the highest to the lowest all characters consciously or unconsciously are working for the consummation of this end. Even hostile elements are pressed into service and skilfully made to bring about this wished-for catastrophe.

¹ This school had strange notions about the eclipse of the Moon. Varāha mihiira in his Bri. S. 5. 11, just refers to them only to repudiate them. He does not care to refute them. Since then they are not found in works on Astronomy. But in Astrology they have a place. We read of the evil influence of Grahanayoga in horoscopes counteracted by Budha (Mercury). Probably, it is this counteracting influence of Budha in the Astrological प्रहणयोग to which Amarachandra in his बा. भा. १८१ and Premānand in his द्वौ. ह. २३१३ refer. That Viśākhadatta should allude to the quaint notion of the Saṃhitā school vouching for the counteracting influence of Budha in an eclipse of the Moon and his learned audience should listen to it without disbelief, proves that the dramatist must not be far removed in time from the astronomer.

² See Wilson's Hindu Theatre.

Next to the unity of action comes the consideration of characters. In delineating them Viśākhadatta arranges them in groups of twos, which forms a novel feature of the play. The members of the groups gain by comparison and their peculiar distinctive traits are brought into bold relief. Chāṇakya and Rākshasa are both astute politicians. They are bold schemers in minding the end and not the means. They are equally altruistic in their aims. But Chāṇakya is cool and circumspect; whereas, Rākshasa is forgetful and blundering. The former observes strict secrecy in all his dealings, so much so that no two agents of his or groups of agents know one another. The latter is too generous to distrust any body about him. One is harsh and unbending. The other is, by nature, gentle and pliable. The contrast of Chandragupta and Malayaketu is still more strongly marked. The former is a capable and considerate ruler. The latter is an incompetent and conceited youth. The faith of the pupil Chandragupta in the preceptor is full and entire. The capricious mountaineer at one time trusts his father's friend and ally, and at another the secret agent of his enemy. One is trained and self-confident. The other is untrained and vain. To be brief, the Maurya is dravya and the Mlechchha is adravya as the author tersely puts it. Of minor characters Chandanadāsa presents a noble example of self-sacrifice. His attachment to Rākshasa is as strong and sincere as that of Induśarman to Chāṇakya. But the flame of love burns bright and undefiled in the heart of the headman of the guild of pearl-merchants; whereas it is befouled and bedimmed by deceit and perjury in that of the sham Bauddha monk. The secret agents Bhāgurāyaṇa and Siddhārthaka are known for the faithful execution of their commissions. The former, however, while discharging it, feels compunctions; for his mind shudders at the deep-dyed perfidy that he has to play. But the latter, with an accommodating conscience, conveniently shuts his eyes to the merits and demerits of the mandates of his master. Less important, but not less interesting are the groups of Nipuṇaka and Virādhagupta, of Vaihīnari and Jājali, etc. They are duplicate portraits differing in shading.

According to Indian works on poeties the permanent feeling (sthāyibhāva) that runs through the play is that of resoluteness (utsāha). This spirit of resolute action is presented to us in a variety of combinations. In Chāṇakya it is coupled with a chivalrous admiration of the enemy's noble qualities. In Chandragupta it is blended with a dutiful reverence for his preceptor. In Malayaketu it is strengthened by the action of filial love. In Rākshasa it is intensified by his unflinching fidelity to his late sovereign. In Bhāgurāyaṇa, Siddhārthaka and Sanīśiddhārthaka it is accentuated by a feeling of awe unto Chāṇakya. In Virādhagupta it is emphasized by a sincere attachment to Rākshasa. In Nipuṇaka and Karabhaka it is characterized by meek submission to the mandates of the master. In Chandanadāsa it is bound up with the spirit of self-sacrifice, in his devoted wife with a stern sense of duty, and in his young son with a sacred regard for family traditions. These accessory feelings (sāmichāribhāvas) conspire to develop the permanent feeling into what is technically known as the heroic sentiment (vīra-rasa). It does not, however, attain to that high pitch in the Mudrārākshasa which it reaches in the Mahāvīracharita. It were vain to look for the overpowering pathos of Bhavabhūti or the delicate touch of Kālidāsa in a drama of state intrigues. The flight of Viśākhadatta is circumscribed by the matter-of-fact sphere of politics. Adopting, therefore, a forcible and business-like style he entertains us with a manly strain of sentiment and vigorous perception of character.

To come to the story of the drama, the conciliation of Rākshasa is the main theme (ādhikārika vastu). Chāṇakya had destroyed the Nandas and placed Chandragupta on the throne. To make him secure, he presses Rākshasa, the minister of the late rulers into the service of their Maurya successor. Inseparably connected with it is the discomfiture of Malayaketu which forms an episode (patākā). The main theme and episode are both cleverly conceived and as beautifully executed. They are almost co-extensive. The most touching incident in this play is the heroic self-sacrifice of Chandanadāsa. Unlike other plays the Mudrārākshasa lays the beginning of this adventitious incident (prakarī) in the initial division (mukha saṃdhī), and ends it when the play itself comes to an end, that is, in the compleptive division (nirvahana saṃdhvi).

Let us now pass on to the progress of the story. The first act opens with the resolution of Chāṇakya to press his political adversary Rākshasa into the service of Chandragupta. To achieve this end vast schemes are formed, shaped and committed to proper agents for execution, schemes that begin to develop while we are still wondering at their scope and aim—so swift is the move of action. In the second act there is a temporary remission of speed; but the progress is by no means dull nor is the move tardy. The present of an ornament to Rākshasa by Malayaketu, the arrival of the secret agent Siddhārthaka, the bestowal of the newly received royal gift on him for the rescue of Śakaṭadāsa, the restoration of the signet ring to Rākshasa, the report of the disagreement between Chāṇakya and Chandragupta and the trumping of the ornaments of Parvataka on Rākshasa, mark the steady onward trend. Gaining in intensity the course of action proceeds with an ever-increasing rapidity in the next three acts, culminating in the execution of the five Mlechchha kings, the dismissal of Rākshasa, and the advance of Malayaketu on Pāṭaliputra. After the heat of this dramatic run of action, the author moderates his pace, and treats us with lyrical snatches in the sixth act. In the seventh, the movement is once more brisk, the business hastening to the wished-for happy catastrophe, the conciliation of Rākshasa.

The Mudrārākshasa discloses a peculiarity of scenic arrangement which deserves to be noted. In the performance of a Sanskrit play, the whole stage is exposed to the view on the removal of the curtain. Characters enter, move about the stage, perform their parts and retire, each act constituting one continuous scene. In the Mudrārākshasa the stage is presented to the view in separate sections, each section forming something like a scene by itself. For instance, the third act of the play shows to us Chandragupta observing from the top of the suburban Sugāṅga Palace how his royal mandate to celebrate the Kaumudī festival is received by his subjects. Then we are taken to the humble habitation of the minister Chāṇakya in the town, wherefrom we return to the palace on the Ganges to witness the feigned quarrel between the royal pupil and his preceptor. Similarly the fifth act presents Malayaketu in the pavilion of state conducting the examination of Siddhārthaka who was caught in the act of leaving the camp without a passport. In the midst of the inquiry we are taken to the tent of Rākshasa in another part of the camp. Thence we hasten back to the royal pavilion to get to the end of the inquiry. Thus the scene of action shifts from one section of the stage to another, so that, while there is a brisk move of action in one part, characters in another part cease to engage the attention of the audience. We thus see Viśākhadatta dividing an act into scenes in the Mudrārākshasa, at the same time taking care to avoid studiously any violent and abrupt change of place.

The poet might have derived the plot of his play from the Rājāvulis, Charitas and other historical materials available to him¹. The murder of Emperor Nanda by an agent of Chāṇakya, ¹ By the bye Śāradātunaya in the eighth chapter of Bhāvaprakāśana cites as an instance of the Bhāsvara variety of Nāṭaka, a play in which Nanda and Chandragupta appear as characters; and in the Introduction of Kundamālā (Dakshina Bhāratī Series) there is the mention of a play named Pratijñā Chāṇakya which, the Editor observes, is referred to in works on Alamkāra in the South. It goes to prove the popularity of the historical theme of the Mudrārākshasa. I may here casually refer to two misleading passages in the commentary of दशरूप which relate to the source of the Mudrārākshasa and to the seventeenth stanza of the second act of the play. The first occurs at the end of the first Parichchheda. It runs thus:— बृहत्कथामूलं मुद्राराक्षसम् । चाणक्यनामा तेनाथ शकटालगृहे रहः । कृत्यां विधाय सहसा सपुत्रो निहतो दृपः ॥ योगनन्दे यशःशषे पूर्वनन्दसुतस्ततः । चन्द्रगुप्तः कृतो राजये चाणक्येन महीजसा ॥ इति बृहत्कथायां सूचितम् । The two verses quoted are in Sanskrit. They could not have formed a part of the Brihatkathā which was composed in the Paisācā Prākṛit. As a matter of fact they belong to the Brihat-Kathāmanjarī of Kshemendra who is junior to the commentator Dhanika by about a century and a half. The passage is, on the very face of it, a later interpolation. Dr. Hall looked upon the commentary on the concluding stanza of the Parichchheda as spurious. The second passage is not much removed from the first. In the beginning of the second Parichchheda Dhanika writes स्थिरो वाङ्सनःक्रियाभिर-चब्लः । यथा……भर्तृहरिशतके । प्रारम्भते न खलु विघ्नभयेन नीचैः प्रारम्भ विघ्नविहता विरमन्ति मध्याः । विधैः पुनः पुनरपि प्रतिहन्यमानाः प्रारम्भमुत्तमगुणा-स्त्वमिवोद्भवन्ति ॥. Though nominally quoted from the Sātaka, the stanza belongs in reality to the Mudrārākshasa. It betrays its close relationship to it by the dramatic mode of expression which is not suited to the Sātaka.

the installation of Sarvārthasiddhi on the vacant throne by Rākshasa, his retirement to a penance forest and his subsequent assassination, the murder of the Himālayan chief Parvata and the conciliation of Rākshasa are, to all appearance, historical facts. Of the characters of the play Chandragupta and Chāṇakya are unquestionably historical personages. So, too, are Rākshasa and Sarvārthasiddhi. If the Brāhmaṇa minister of the Nandas had been a creation of the poet, such a prominent character should not have been given so bad a name. The author generally selects suggestive names for his fictitious characters, for example, Nipuṇaka (the clever one), Virādhagupta (the strangely disguised one), Siddhārthaka (the successful one), etc. How could one who had achieved nothing be given the name of Sarvārthasiddhi, if he had been a fictitious character? The conflict with Rākshasa was an aftermath of the twelve years' war with his masters, the Nandas.

Of the historical characters the most prominent is Chāṇakya. He was the son of Chāṇaka. One of his ancestors was Kuṭila after whom he is named Kauṭilya. The Kauṭilyas formed a subdivision of the Yāskas who were a branch of the Bhṛigus¹. Chāṇakya and Kauṭilya are thus, patronyms. His name proper was Vishṇugupta. By his great learning he had earned the distinguishing epithets of Budha and Sarvajña². Himself a student of the Sāmaveda³, he had also learnt the other three⁴, and was an adept in the mysteries of the sacrificial lore⁵. He was the Guru, i.e., preceptor, of Chandragupta. It was to train him up in politics that the sage wrote the *Kauṭiliya Arthaśāstra*⁶. Chandragupta was a very promising prince endowed with many good qualities of the head and the heart. His step-brothers, the eight Nandas, envied and hated him ; and Chāṇakya, who was his preceptor, also became an object of their hatred. Once, when he was at the Court of Emperor Nanda, he was spitefully ousted from the seat of honour and insulted by them. The preceptor and the pupil felt highly offended and they left the Court. Collecting a force of mercenary soldiers from the north-western frontier, they waged war with the Nandas. In this long and hard-fought struggle of twelve years¹, the Emperor was assassinated by a secret agent of Chāṇakya come to negotiate peace², and his eight sons were slain one after another³ in the war. By his iron energies and resourceful brain, Chāṇakya thus won an empire for Chandragupta⁴. His next object was to make him secure on the throne by winning over Rākshasa and pressing him into service, in which he equally succeeded by his wonderful genius. In the science of politics Kautilya's authority is almost supreme. Kāmandaka reverentially makes obeisance to him in words which are highly complimentary⁵. This great political thinker is also famous for his simple and elegant didactic verses⁶. His success as a practical statesman was due to the policy of thoroughness of which he is said to be the advocate⁷. The earliest known cypher seems to have been devised by him ; for it bears his name¹. His fame principally rests on his Arthaśāstra.

The ethics of the Mudrārākshasa are the ethics of politics, not of ordinary life. The course of policy followed is that of crookedness (sāthyānīti). Its wickedness is partly redeemed by devoted fidelity, by a strict sense of duty and by selflessness of those who follow it. In their political code the end justifies the means. Their low morality is not to be taken as an index of the morals of the times any more than that of the Pāradārika section of the Kāmasūtra. The path by which ordinary people went, was the path of rectitude (dharmanīti) presented in लघुचाणक्य and वृद्धचाणक्य. However harshly we may think of the crooked policy of Chāṇakya, it must be said to his credit that his schemes, far from being bloody, are meant to prevent the shedding of blood. In the incidents of the play there is not a single sacrifice of human life for which Chāṇakya is accountable. The orders of the executions of Śakaṭādāsa and Chandanadāsa are mere demonstrations ; and the reported decapitation of the executioners of the former is but a political lie. The antecedents of the play are not bloodless. The extirpation of the Nandas, however, was an unavoidable contingency of aggressive warfare, and the murders of Sarvārthasiddhi and Parvataka were political necessities.

The Mudrārākshasa has the good fortune, I should rather say evil fortune, of having a number of commentaries which, proposing to lead, simply mislead us. They show a deplorable ignorance of the plot ; and the text they follow is corrupt in many places. The best of the lot is the Mudrārākshasa-Vyākhyā published in the Bombay Sanskrit Series. It was composed by Dhunḍirāja, son of Lakshmaṇa of the Vyāsa family at the suggestion of Tryambaka Adhvarin, the minister of the Bhonsle king Sarfoji (1711–1729 A.C.) of Tanjore in the Saka year 1635 (1713 A.C.). The commentator gives copious dramaturgical notes but they are deplorably inaccurate. Dhunḍirāja was the author of Śāhavilāsa, a work on music, named after king Śāhaji, brother of Sarfoji, of Tanjore. The second commentary is Mudrādīpikā by Graheśvara, a native of Tirabhukti (Tirhut). The scholiast traces his descent from Chakrapāṇi through Śri-Vatsa-Kavīndra, Jayāditya, and Rāmaśarmaṇḍita, down to Siddheśvara who was the father of Mahāmahopādhyāya Graheśvar. He mentions Miśra Vateśvara as his guru. His is an unprofitably discursive and provokingly meagre scholium¹. The third is Mudrāprakāsa by Vaṭeśvara, son of Gauripati or Gauriśvara. In the exposition of the text it is in no way better than Graheśvara's. The fourth is the short commentary of Ratināthachakrin cited in Dr. Hillebrandt's edition of the Mudrārākshasa. The fifth is तात्पर्यबोधिनी by Svāmīśāstrin of Hārita gotra. He was a native of अनन्तसागर otherwise called चोलवन्दान in मधुरामण्डल (Madura Territory), and was patronized by king Rāmachandra. A versified abstract of the plot is prefixed to it. Besides these commentaries there are two Sanskrit versions (chhāyās) of the Prākrit portion of the play. One is by Bhāskara of the Kaśyapa gotra, son of Appājibhatta and grandson of Haribhatta of Benares. The other is the work of Bābūrāja alias Keśava Upādhyāya, the guru of the Marathi poet Moropant. He wrote it in the Śaka year 1683 very likely for his प्रियशिष्य (favourite pupil) Moropant. These yield a few good readings not found elsewhere. All the works are of modern date.

There are four guides that pretend to introduce us to the play. They are made up of tales and legends no better than those given in Kathāsaritsāgara and Bṛihatkathāmañjari. Two of them, namely, Mudrārākshasakathopodghāta by Dhunḍirāja the commentator and Chāṇakyakathā by Ravinartaka, are in verse. The latter also goes by the name of कौटिल्यकथासार. Ravinartaka says that he has versified an extant prose abstract. The other two, namely, Mudrārākshasapūrvasāmkathā by Ananta Kavi, son of Timāji Paṇḍita and grandson of Bāloji Paṇḍita who lived in the middle of the seventeenth century, and Mudrārākshasapūrvapīthikā of nameless authorship, are in prose. These unhistorical works are next to useless in the elucidation of the plot of a historical play.

Manuscripts of plays are in the habit of giving names of their own coinage to acts. In this they seem to imitate writers of alamkāra. They not unfrequently refer the reader not to the play, but to the particular act of it, for the quotation they make. While they do this, they give a distinctive name to the act in question. It is a time-honoured practice of theirs. Conforming to it I have given proper designations to the acts of the Mudrā-rākshasa. In coining new names I have adopted the view-point of Chāṇakya and taken care to see that they are expressive and appropriate.

Before I conclude, I note some minor characteristics of the author. The first thing that attracts attention is the use of Ślesha. All premonitions (patākāsthānaka) are based on this figure. Viśākhadatta has a partiality for it. According to Bāṇa it was the mode of expression which the northern poets freely indulged in. Their eastern brethren favoured ojas and the southern delighted in utprekshā. Poets of the west cared only for *sense*¹. In the Mudrārākshasa the double entendre is mostly suggestive. There is no misuse or abuse of it as in the Kādambarī or the Vāsavadattā. Another peculiarity of the poet is the simile based on parallelism (bimbapratibimbabhāva). When the comparison instituted is striking, it does not fail to interest us. But in a few cases it degenerates into verbal correspondence, when it proves dry and insipid. Next comes Bhangyantarākathana, which calls for a remark. The poet states something in prose and repeats the same thing in verse just after that². It is tautology pure and simple. Fortunately for us, instances of Bhangyantarākathana are not many in the Mudrārākshasa. Māgha and Śriharṣha treat us with this intellectual jugglery and Mallinātha views it with approbation. It should, however, be repudiated. Viśākhadatta is at times obscure and enigmatical, as for instance, in Mu. iv. 8 and vi. 18. But the Massinger of India is not the less interesting for all that.

i.01 नान्यन्ते—A dramatical performance (नाट्य) had its prelude (पूर्वरङ्ग). Drama or नाटक, as an offspring of नाट्य, accepted the nine preliminaries of the prelude. They were, however, dropped one after another as time went on; and only नान्दी was retained. It consisted of a benedictory stanza pronounced by the manager of the prelude (पूर्वरङ्गसूत्रधार). On his retiring, the manager of the play (नाटकसूत्रधार) entered; and the play began with its prologue (प्रस्तावना). Latterly, the prelude was dispensed with altogether, when नान्दी, प्रोत्तेचना &c. were made parts of the prologue. Much ingenuity is wasted on the interpretation of नान्यन्ते सूत्रधार: by later writers on dramaturgy and commentators of plays, showing a deplorable ignorance of the history of Sanskrit Drama. About नान्दी see the following verses:—यद्यच्यहानि भूयांसे पूर्वरङ्गास्य नाटके । तथाप्यवश्यं कर्तव्या नान्दी विव्लोपशान्तये ॥ आशीर्वचनसंयुक्ता स्तुतिव्यस्मात् प्रयुज्यते । देवद्विज-नृपादीनं तस्मान्नान्दीते सा स्मृता ॥.

सूत्रधारः: i. e. नाटकसूत्रधारः, who is thus defined—नर्तनीयकथासूत्रं प्रथमं येन सूच्यते । रङ्गभूमिं समासाद्य सूत्रधारः स उच्यते ॥

i.1 धन्या केय—शिव is represented as supporting गौरी on the left thigh and carrying the river-goddess गङ्गा on the head. This is poetically construed into a source of Gauri's jealousy. विजया—She is one of the female friends and confidants of उमा; See शब्द-कल्पहृष्टम्. सुरसरित्—The holy गङ्गा flowed, of yore, in the heavenly region. To oblige भगीरथ who practised severe austerities to win her favour, she agreed to come down to the lower regions and absolve his forebears burnt to ashes by wrathful कपिल. शिव helped her in the descent and held her on his head where she has been ever since. At the earnest supplications भगीरथ, the god let loose a stream which followed him to the nether world. See रामा. I. The figure of speech (अलंकार) is वक्त्रोक्ति. The equivokes are based on the रुद and योगरुद signification of शशिकला and on the direct and indirect objectival relation implied in नारी पृच्छामि. Cultured people, of yore, took delight in वक्षोर्कि, प्रहेलिका &c. vide का. सू. As an instance of the former may be cited Rat. V. P.

i.2. पादस्याविर्भवन्ती०—‘The term नृत denotes ‘rhythmical movements regulated by the marking of musical intervals and by time. Distinct therefrom is नृय or pantomime grounded on the externalization of feelings.’ The dance here referred to is ताण्डव, for which see Nat. Sa. IV. The present participle अभिनयतः, like प्रयुञ्जानस्य further on, is used intrasitively. दोषाम्—शिव, in the form of नटराज, is represented as having a thousand arms; so the word दोषन् is used in the plural number. ज्वलनकगमुच दृष्टि—The god शिव is three-eyed (त्रियक्ष). The sun forms the right, and the moon the left eye. Between the two up in the forehead is the third eye. It is the eye of fire. This is here referred to. त्रिपुरविजयेन्—शिव, the conqueror of the three aerial cities of asuras. Worsted in fight by gods, the asuras repaired to मय, their architect who constructed for them aerial cities of gold, silver and iron respectively which could be invisible at will. Secure behind their walls they went about harrassing the three worlds. At the request of gods, शिव, specially improvised with a bow and an arrow of magic virtue, destroyed the three cities at one stroke with an igneous shaft; and with them perished the asura host. See Mb. VII, 203, 62-80. The figure of speech is स्वभावोर्कि. With the stanza cf. Rat. H. V. II 55-56.

The benedictory stanzas foreshadow the crooked policy of चाणक्य and his solicitude to save the life of राक्षस whom he wants to win over.

i.23. मुद्राराक्षसम—मुद्रया संगृहीतो राक्षसो यस्मिन्. Some dissolve it as a कर्मधारय and then resort to लक्षणा. नाटकम्—It is thus defined:—नाटकं रथातवृत्तं स्थात् पञ्चपन्धिसमान्वितम् । विलासदूर्यादिगुणवद् युक्तं नानाविभूतिभिः ॥ पञ्चाधिका दशपरास्तत्राङ्काः परिकीर्तिताः ॥ एक एव भवेदङ्गः ॥ शृङ्गारो वीर एव वा ॥ S. D. 6.

i.3. चीयते.—On स्तम्बकरे adj. from स्तम्ब m., a sheaf of corn, cf. P. III. 224. स्तम्बशक्तोरित्. There is a fusion (संकर) of अथर्वनरन्यास and अप्रसुतप्रशंसा here.

i.31. तद्यावदिदार्दी—What follows is a poetical device to introduce the principal character of the play. The manager and his wife translate themselves to पाटलिपुत्र of the time of चंद्रगुप्त alias चाणक्य. There is the town talk of राक्षस seizing Chandra; and the manager's wife is led by it to understand that there is to be the seizure of Chandra, the Moon by राक्षस, राहु, that is to say, the eclipse of the Moon. The manager explains to his wife that रात्रि may seek to assail Chandra in full splendour, but there will be no eclipse. For the union of Budha saves Chandra. Indignant at the talk of the seizure of Chandra, that is, Chandragupta, व्याणक्य enters and the play begins, the manager and his wife retiring.

संगतिकम्—Originally signifying the triad of नृत्त, गीत and वाद्य, the term comes to mean any one of the three by the process of लक्षणा, see Chaturakalinātha on S. R. I. I. 21. In the passage under notice it signifies ‘acting,’ as also in the prologues of Nag-Mal. &c. In M., I. 5., it means playing on musical instruments and in K. p. 201, I. 3, it denotes dancing.

i.5. गुणवत्युपाय—For the six gunas or courses of action in dealing with an enemy see Ak.—संधिर्न विग्रहो यानमासनं द्वैष्माश्रयः ; and for the four upāyas or statesmanly tactics see Kam. 18.3 साम दानं च भेदश्च दण्डश्चेति चतुष्टयम्. The establishment of order or stability as opposed to disorder or anarchy is स्थिति. The triad of धर्म, अर्थ and काम is त्रिवर्ग. There is a fusion of श्लेष and रूपक.

i.56. उवर्णिमान्तिदा—The feeding of ब्राह्मण relates to the शाद्व ceremonial. Of all शाद्व seasons the eclipse day is the most meritorious ; see V.P. राहेष्व दर्शने दत्तं श्राद्धमाच्छ्रद्धतारकम् । गुणवत् सर्वकार्मीयं पितृणामुपतिष्ठति ॥ The scriptures enjoin that the शाद्व offering should be made just at the time when the Moon is in the umbra: see Ap. D. S. II, 7-18, 23-25. The offering on the eclipse day consists of money presents, uncooked food or rich sweetmeat (see पाकविशेष of the play).

i.50. उवरज्जादि किल चन्दो त्ति—This is the reading of H (M). Others insert भवद्व before चन्दो which is rejected, because it cannot be construed with चन्द्र, meaning चन्द्रगुप्त, i.511. पूर्व यु णवर-वासी—Here णवर by pre-eminence denotes the city of पाटलिपुत्र, and the public report pertains to the designs of राक्षस against Chandragupta. For the use of नगर in the restricted sense see DHVS. स्थाने खलु कुसुमपुरेस्यानन्यनगरसदृशी नगरमित्यविशेषग्राहिणी पृथिव्यां स्थिता कीर्तिः ॥

i.514. विप्रलब्धा is here used in the sense of deluded. The manager's wife misunderstands what the people talk about. There is no attempt on the part of any one to deceive her. So I drop

i.6. कुर्वन्तः स०—See Bri S. 5, 17 and गर्व quoted by Utpala thereon. For ग्रह in the sense of राहु see A. S. 601; see also R. II. 28. What बुधयोग is and how it averts the attack of राहु on the Moon, it is difficult to say. It is alluded to in Am. B. Bh. 1. 8. and in the Gujarati poet Premanand's D. H. 23. 3.

For a better understanding of the stanza I propose another explanation which aims at solving or cutting the knot. It is as under. 'Malignant Rahu (ग्रह), in concert with Ketu, now (i. e. in day time) seeks to assail by might Chandra (i. e. the moon) in full splendour. But the horizontal contact (योग) of the sign कन्या (i. e. Virgo) presided over by बुध (i. e. Mercury) saves the Moon (from the eclipse).' Here योग is loosely used in the sense of लम्प and बुधयोग in the sense of बुधस्वामिकलम्प i. e. कन्यालम्प, for which see infra iv. 176-8 notes. The mention of कन्यालम्प points to फाल्गुन as the month in which the events of Act I. take place. Taken in connection with the plot of the play the stanza is easy of interpretation. 'One cruel of purpose, that is, राक्षस, in concert with Malayaketu, seeks to assail Chandragupta strong (lit. perfect) in all the members of the body politic. But the agency (योग) of persons under the leadership of the wise one (बुध), that is चाणक्य, saves Chandragupta (from the assailment)'. In this suggestive sense बुधयोग stands for बुधस्वामिकयोग, that is, भद्रभटादियोग.

The term केतु denotes मलयकेतु whereof the initial member is dropped; compare भामा for सत्यभामा and दत्त for देवदत्त. The elision of the final member gives चन्द्र from चन्द्रगुप्त and शकट from शकटदास. Compare गुरु for शिवगुरु in S. S. G. 2. 21. The rule of syllabic elision confined to proper nouns in संस्कृत is extended to common nouns in प्राकृत and in modern Vernaculars of the संस्कृत stock; e. g. Pr. अजुओ D. N. I. 17., Sk. अयुक्पर्ण; Pr. छिण्णो D. N. III. 27; Sk. छिन्नचारिन्नि; Guj. मंना, Pr. मयणसलाया D. N. VI 117; Guj. सीमन्त, Sk. समिन्तरन्नयन. The term मण्डल is the collective designation of the seven members (अङ्ग or प्रकृति) of the body politic, which are given in the following verse :—स्वाम्यमात्यश्च राष्ट्रं च दुर्गी कोशो बलं सुहृत् । परस्परोपकारीदं सप्ताङ्गं राज्यमुद्धते ॥ Kam. IV. I. When all the members are whole and strong the मण्डल is said to be संपूर्ण and the king is संपूर्णमण्डल; See काम. VIII 3 and उपाध्यायनिश्चेष्टठीका thereon.

The verse कूर्मः स० is quoted in Vāgbhāta's Kā. to illustrate the poet's proficiency in उपोतिष. The figure of speech is शेष.

i.7. कौटिल्यः कुटिल—One of the ancestors of विष्णुगुप्त alias चाणक्य was कुटिल, after whom he is called कौटिल्य. For further information see the Introduction. The proper noun कौटिल्य m. should not be confounded with the abstract noun कौटिल्य n. meaning crookedness. मौर्येन्द्रोः—Of Chandra (i. e. Chandragupta) the Maurya. सनामनः (समानं नाम यस्य, तस्य ; बहुवीहिः)—of his name sake.

i.73. प्रस्तावना—The prologue or प्रस्तावना is meant to acquaint the audience with the author and the play, as also to introduce a character or characters of the play. Of the various modes of doing this, the one here used is the उद्घाटयक mode. One of the characters of the play from behind the stage, hearing what is said on the stage and interpreting it differently, enters, and the play begins, the manager having retired. In connection with this see the following verses of S. D. नटी विदूषको वापे पारिष्वेष एत्र वा । सूत्रधारण सहिताः संलापं यत्र कुर्वते । विश्रैवकियैः स्वकार्योत्थैः प्रस्तुताक्षेपिभिर्मिथः । आमुखं तत् तु विशेषं नामना प्रस्तावनापि सा ॥ पदानि त्वगतायानि तदर्थगतये नराः योजयन्ति पैदैरन्यैः स उद्घाटयक उत्त्यते ॥

i. 74. ततः प्रविशति शिखां—Chanakya's touching the lock of hair on his head for a fresh vow and his defiant speech are suggestive of his pretended arrogance which is meant to lead to a public rupture with Chandragupta.

The manuscripts read मुक्ता शिखां परामृशन्. But the lock of hair must have been tied up on the fulfilment of the vow of extirpating the Nandas. So the hair could not be loose. I have accordingly dropped the word मुक्ताम् which has been interpolated in the stage direction.

i.8. वध्यमानां...को नेच्छति शिखां मे—The present participle वध्यमाना implies a recent past action; see P. III. 3. 131. The interpolation of मुक्तम् in the stage direction in mss. may be traced to वध्यमानम् being taken to denote the present. The stanza नन्दकुल० is quoted in Alam. kau. as an instance of मालारूपक. I would read the stanza as follows—नन्दकुलकालभुजगस्य बहलकोपानलस्य धूमलताम् । अया-पिन्दमानां वध्यः को नेच्छति शिखां मे, and make it परंपरितरूपक.

i.9. उल्लङ्घवयन् मम—There is a fusion (संकर) of उपमा and परंपरितरूपक here. The stanza contains the वहिपतस्त्वं maxim.

i.96. कार्याभियोग एव—चाणक्य says this to allay the fears of his pupil, observing the trepidations of the latter. i.913. प्रकाशी-भवन्तम् is equivalent to प्रकाशभूतम्; see the note on वध्यमानाम् supra. i. 912-13 सोहम्...कुतः यस्य मम—The particle कुतः is here superfluous Cf. Nag.IV. अहो जगद्विष्परितमस्य महासत्वस्य चेतः...कुतः...प्राणान्...एष साधु इत्युमिक्य...यः परार्थं जहाति. The expletive character of कुतः in Sanskrit finds a parallel in the use of the Gujarati particle के in the following sentence :—कोइ नोकरी एवं नयी के जेमां माणस दरेक वात पेतानी मुन-सफीयी करी शके. The particles कुतः and के, derived from किम्, introduce subordinate relative sentences in Sanskrit and Gujarati.

i.10. इयामीक्षशाननेन्दून्—The personification of दिश् as अङ्गाना or युवति is very common in संस्कृत literature. Here, however, we have the personification of युवति as दिश् in consequence of the faces of the wives of the enemies being represented as so many Moons. The stanza contains the figures समस्तवस्तुविषयरूपक and परंपरितरूपक. It may be noted here that the use of the simile इलन इव वने is meaningless after the express identification of ऋषि and वृङ्गि. The stanza contains the दग्धेन्धनवाह्नि maxim.

i.11. शोचन्तोऽवनतै०—The present indicative पश्यन्ति expresses a recent past action here; see P. III. 3. 131, वर्तमानसामीःये वर्तमानवद्वा०. The figure of speech is पर्याय coupled with उपमा.

i.114. प्रतिशाभर—Here भर signifies अतिशय. शक्ति धारयामि—चाणक्य continues to wield the sword (शक्ति) which is the minister's badge of office, and does not retire to the penance forest only for the sake of Chandragupta.

i.12. समुत्साता नन्दा—There is the union (संस्कृते) of उपमा and यथासंख्य here. As हृदयरोग or हृद्रोग is one and not manifold and as उत्तरात् is more appropriately predicate of शत्य, I have preferred हृदयशत्यः to हृदयरोगः in the text. शत्य in the sense of a barb is both masculine and neuter; see Ak. वा एुसि शत्यं दाष्ट्कुना ॥

i.121. अय वा अगृहीते—In the determined opposition of राक्षस who identified himself with the cause of his fallen master and waged war to death, the spirit of Nanda was still alive. Hence the statement किमुत्तरात् नन्दवैश्वरय. In order to make the Maurya king secure, it was necessary to subdue the opposition of राक्षस and to win him over.

i.122. To make the passage correspond to the first two lines of the foregoing stanza I read चन्द्रगुसे लक्ष्याः instead of चंद्रगुस लक्ष्याः of MSS.

I. 123. तपोवनगतोऽपि धातितः—A penance forest was regarded as a sanctuary; see Ar. II 2. प्रदिव्याभयस्थावरजड्मानि च ब्राह्मणेभ्यो ब्राह्मसो-मारण्यानि तरोवनानि च तपस्विभ्यो गोत्रपरागि प्रशङ्खे । Hence it was that Dushyanta had to give up the chase of the deer in S. i.

i.13. ऐश्वर्यादनपेत—For the कर्मप्रवचनीय construction तं गच्छन्त्यनु see P. I. 4. 90. The adjective निःसंग means disinterested or void of cupidity here; see Tr. S. रामसङ्गै तु गृनुता. The figure of speech is काःयलिङ्ग.

I. 14. अप्तेन च—Construe the latter half as follows:—भूतये समुदिताः प्रहविक्रमभक्तयो येवां जुगाः ते नृपतेर्भूत्याः । इतरे संपत्सु चाप्तसु च कलत्रम् (इव). A servant (भूत्य) is supported (भ्रियते) and he renders service. A wife (भार्या) has to be supported (भरणीया), but she does not serve. A servant who does not render service to his master is just in the category of wife (कलत्र or भार्या) to him. Compare P. Y. 1 सर्वं हि सैन्यमनुरागमृते कलत्रम् । The figure of speech is अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा.

i. 14!. The sentence कथमसौ वृष्टलस्य साच्चिद्यग्रहणेन सानुग्रहः स्यादिति occurs before i. 14. in MSS. It is there read in continuation of अत एवास्माकं त्वरस्मग्रहणे यत्नः, on which it is made to depend. Such a construction is inadmissible in the passage under notice which is an apostrophe beginning with साधु and ending in i. 14 चाप्तसु च ॥. So I restore the sentence to its right place just after i.14. नशयन् is a सुभूत्समास; see काःयालं स्. V. 2. 12. नैकशब्दः सुभूतेति समासात्. Here we have an enumeration of the measures taken by वाणिज्य to counteract and mollify the hostility of राक्षस. i. 143 विषकन्या, विषकमया, विषमयी कन्या or विषालक्ष्मा, the poison-maid, was a beautiful damsel, whose system was charged with poison to such an extent that an intercourse with her was believed to cause death ; see Susr ; I. 5. विषकमयोपयोगाद्वा क्षणाउजाहादसुन् नरः. See also As S. Su. आजम्भवेषसंयोगात् कन्या विषमयी कृता । स्पशोच्छवासादिभिर्हन्ति तस्यास्वेतत् परीक्षणम् ॥ तमस्तकथं संस्पर्शान् भलायते पुष्पपलुबौ । शद्यायां मत्कुर्गैर्वद्ये युक्ताभिः स्नानवारिणा । जनुभिर्ब्रिन्थते झात्वा तामेवं दूरतस्यजेत् ॥. She is different from her namesake of astrology, born under an inauspicious configuration of planets. She is also to be distinguished from योगनारी or योगाङ्गना of Dk., a very siren employed to poison an enemy secretly. Mr. Tawney directs the attention of the reader to the 11th tale in the Gesta Romanorum, where an Indian queen sends a poison-maid to Alexander the Great. Aristotle frustrates the stratagem; see Liu. i. 144 जनारवाद् इ—an evil report among the people. i. 145 अभिव्यक्ते—for demonstration, to demonstrate. i. 147 The clauses शश्यः स्वदेश...प्रमार्द्धमिति are subordinate sentences showing cause depending on the principal sentence लोकप्रत्ययार्थम्... भागुरायगेनापवाहितः...मलयकेतुः । With शश्यः read in the first clause, we have to supply शश्यम् in the second to agree with अयशः which is neuter. i. 1410 नानाःयज्ञनाः—compare वैतालिकश्यज्ञनः ii.2358. i. 1411 प्रवारगतम्—all about their doings, movements. i. 1412 कृत-क्रुद्यता—the condition of seeming malcontents. There are four types of malcontents, कुद्रुद्य, लुधक्रुद्य, भोतक्रुद्य, and अवमानितक्रुद्य, their grounds of disaffection being anger, cupidity, fear and indignity ; see Niti V. स्वामिदेष्वद्वोपाभ्यामुपहतदृत्यः कुद्रुद्धभोतावमानितः क्रुद्यः १०॥६३॥; see also Kam. XVIII. 24. 26. and Ar. दण्डिण् speaks of them in Dk. The term is twice used by विशालदत्त in the political signification ; see Mu. ii. 76. and iv. 2. It occurs in Ram. II. 100. 69, H. V. XIV., 17. Yas. I pp. 400, ll. 4, as also in Susr K. 1. 3. and As. S. Su. For the grounds of disaffection of भद्रभट and others see Mu. iii. 2417.31. सहोस्थायिन्—a companion in a war of revolution. i. 1413 प्रधानपुरुष—a person of eminence; hence a high official.

The use of कृद्य m. a malcontent, being mostly confined to polity its meaning was early forgotten, which gave rise to mislections in general literature. Thus in the passage तेषु तेषु कृत्येषु प्राप्तरन् परोपजापाः, of Dk. just alluded to, कृत्येषु has been changed to अकृत्येषु by some ignorant revisionist; and in the text before us कृत्य has been corrupted to कृतकृत्य. Two more cases of syllabic elision occur in the play, one in act III, 197—कौमुदीमहोत्सवप्रतिषेधस्य किं फलमार्यः पश्यति, and the other in act V, 922,—पुतेर्षामध्ये केचिद्रेः कोशाहस्तभ्यामर्थिनः, where we have to read पश्यतीति and कोशाहस्तिकाभ्याम् respectively, as will be explained later. कृतकृत्य adj. would mean gratified, satisfied, whereas कृत्य m. means a dissatisfied person, a malcontent, and कृतकृत्य a seeming malcontent. It is true that भद्रभट and others had been raised to posts of eminence and gratified; but latterly they were turned into seeming malcontents by चाणक्य for political purposes as will appear in act III. I, therefore, read कृतकृत्य. परिकल्पितावरणमङ्गला of बीररावव in U. also presents a case of syllabic elision. It should be, as I understand, परिकल्पितावतरणमङ्गला. For अवतरणमङ्गल or अवतरणक see K. p. 68, l. 16. The variants परिकल्पितविमानावतरणमङ्गला and परिकल्पितरथावरणमङ्गला lack the sense of अवतरणक and are to be rejected. i. 1413 तीक्ष्णरसदार्दानाम्—See Vai.—रसाधानं विषाधानं तीक्ष्णा मर्मग्नि घातकाः। The term तीक्ष्ण occurs in Mv. V. and A. R. V. In the latter play शूर्यगच्छ is spoken of as रसदा. i. 1414 खितिपति—प्रत्यासन्न m. a personal attendant of the king, a hazuri. i. 1415 औषानसी दण्डनीति—the science of polities expounded by उशनस् or शुक. This sage is highly respected as a political thinker. He is last of the divine compilers of नीति; see Mb. XII. 59, 29, 80, 85. कौटिल्य makes obeisance to him and often refers to him in his अर्थशास्त्र. He recognised दण्डनीति only as विद्या, rejecting as independent sciences ऋग्नी, वार्ता and आन्वीक्षिकी, and advocated the policy of मित्रासि. His work is lost, the so-called शुकनीति being a modern fabrication. चतुःषष्ठ्यक्ते ज्योतिःशास्त्रे—according to गर्गेसहिता there are twenty-four principal themes and forty subordinate ones, together making up the sixty-four अङ्गानि of the science of heavenly bodies. i. 1419 भनुष्टेय भविष्यति is equal to अनुष्टास्यते. i. 1420 अस्मत्तः stands for अस्माभिः. The suffixes रस्, ग्रा and अ afford early glimpses of the analytical structure in the synthetical संस्कृत. i. 1420 प्रधानप्रकृति—the principal member of the body politic, that is to say, the king. प्रकृति is synonymous with अङ्ग a member of the body politic; see Ak.—स्वाध्यमात्य-सूहरूपोशराद्भूवलानि च। राज्याङ्गानि प्रकृतयः. Of these, the king is the chief; hence he is called प्रधानप्रकृति: see infra. प्रधानवैरम् III. 12. and उत्तमाङ्ग VI. 5. The term is used by भवभूति in माल. X—प्रधानप्रकृतिकांपस्वेवं परिहृतः. i. 1421. In politics तन्त्र n. signifies internal administration; see नीति. V.—स्वमण्डलयालनाभियोगस्तन्त्रम्। उदास्ते—is passive, remains inactive, see Si. II 42. स्वयंमभियोगदुःखैरसाधारणरपाकृतं × × राज्यं—In as much as there is no word answering to असाधारण in the succeeding stanza which is meant to bear out the statement under notice by the comparison of नरेन्द्राः and गजेन्द्राः, I suspect that the text is somewhat corrupt. Under this impression I propose to read स्वयमभियोगदुःखैरसाधारणं × × राज्यं [sovereignty not attended by (lit. not mingled with) the paines of personal exertion] which would be the negative counterpart of स्वयमात्य भुञ्जाना नरेन्द्राः; compare S. IV. उत्कण्ठासाधारणं परितोषमनुभवामि.

I. 15. स्वयमात्य—Compare नीति. V.—का नाम निर्बृतिः स्वयमूढतृण-भोजिनो गजस्य. There is a fusion (संकर) of अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा and तुल्ययोगिता. i. 151. यमपटिक—See Hch. p. 170,—प्रविश्वेवं च विष्णीवर्मनि कुतूहला-कुलबहुलबालकपरिवृत्तनूर्द्धर्यविष्कम्भवितते वामहस्तवर्तिनि भविणमहिषारुदप्रेत-नाथसनाथे चित्रवति पटे परलोकव्यातिकरमितरकरकालितेन द्वरकापडेन कथयन्तं यम-पटिकं ददर्श। The instrumental यमपटेन denotes साहचर्य. With यमपट compare कामपट, कादं. p. 316, l. 8.

I. 16. यणमह जमस्य—The term जमस्य, coming from यम् P. I. is suggestive of the all-subduing power of the God of death; and the diminutive देवपृहि, derived from देव with the suffix क, implies a sort of contempt of other gods. तडफडन्तं—see D. N. V. 59.—तडफडियं परिचालिआमि and compare Gujarati तडफડ or तरफડ. The form देवपृहि reminds us of Vedic. देवेभिः. The stanza has a hidden meaning (वस्तु-ध्वनि). The speaker says by implication:—“ Ye adherents of the Nandas ! Make your homage to all-subduing चाणक्य. Of what avail are others ? He punishes with death all those who profess devotion to others, their souls trembling in mortal agony.” The stanza serves as a premonition (पताकास्थानक), as it shadows forth the execution of शकटदास and the arrest of चंद्रनदास.

I. 17. जीविअव्य—Livelihood. The stanza by implication (वस्तु-ध्वनि) points out the advantages of winning the good graces of चाणक्य by loyalty (भक्ति). विसमाओः is the double masculine ablative singular formed from the ablative singular विसमा (Sk. विषमात्) by the addition of the suffix ओः (Sk. तस्) with a view to distinguish it from the nominative plural विसमा (Sk. विषमाः). On the shortening of the long vowel ई of गृहीत in प्राकृत see. Hai. V. VIII, I. 101 —पानीयादिवित्. The stanza contains the figure अथन्तरन्यास. Coupled with it there is काव्यलिङ्ग in the first half and व्याघ्रात in the second. i. 17० जाव एदं...गावामि | see Hch. p. 52 :—यमपटिका हत्ताप्तरे वित्रमालेखन्त्युद्यातिकाः i. 17१० सुगृहीतनामः—See Tr. S.—अय यः प्रातः इवर्यते तुभ्यकामया । स सुगृहीनामा स्थात् ; see also Jagaddhara on Mal. I. सुगृहीतं शोभ नोक्षारणं बलि कृणीदेवन्मङ्गलं नाम यस्य. i. 17१॥ अतगो केरअस्स मह धर्मभादुणो घरं होदि—The speaker means to say that since चाणक्य was not a disbelieving Buddha or Jain but a devout follower of the orthodox faith, he would be glad to hear his religious discourses. This is, of course, a pretext of the spy in disguise to get admission. धर्मआता (धर्मेण आता) is a सुखु समाप्त. केर or केरञ्च is a Pr. postposition expressing possessive relation; see Hai. V. VIII. 2.147—इदमर्थस्य केरः|. It is related to Sk. ईय and कीय. Though originally a derivative suffix, it is used as a separate word and the noun or pronoun of which it forms a possessive adjunct is put in the genitive case; see Mal. VII, तस्स यत्वे केरअस्स अतगो सरीरस्स. In the same way the suffix तण derived from the Sk. secondary suffix तन is turned into a possessive adjunct governing the genitive case in the अपब्रंशः; see Hai. V. VIII. 4.422.—संबन्धिनः केरतणौ. i. 17१० ण सञ्चो सञ्च्य जाणादि—see Mb. III. 72.4.—सर्वः मर्व न जानाति सर्वज्ञो नास्ति कथनः । नैकत्र परिनिष्ठास्ति ज्ञानस्य मुहुषे कवित् ॥ If the speaker be quoting a portion of this stanza, the text should read सञ्चो सञ्च्य ण जाणादि. We shall have to note such transpositions later on. i. 17२० सर्वज्ञातामुपाध्यायस्य see infra act VII; 8,—आकरः सर्वज्ञानां०. i. 17२२ कास चन्दो अणभिपेशो—The question ostensibly partakes of the nature of an enigma, to which the reply is कमलाग. What the speaker insinuates is noted below in the comment on कमलाण मण०. कास चन्दो अणभि पेशो—A glance at the next speech of the spy and the speech of चाणक्य that succeeds shows that the dislike or hatred referred to is not confined to one person. I, therefore, read कास (Sk. केशम्) instead of कस्म (Sk. कस्य), for which see Hai. V. VIII. 3. 63. i. 17२६ तुम दाव एतिं जाणासि—The present indicative जाणासि here stands for the potential or imperative as does एति for एत्यु in Si. IV. 66.

i. 18. कमलाण मग०—The speaker insinuates that there are persons in Pushpapura who outwardly affect loyalty, but inwardly hatch treason. The stanza contains the figure अप्रत्युतप्रशंसा. रुवाहिन्तो—In the प्रत्युत हि, त्तो and हिन्तो are ablative terminations serving for the singular and the plural alike. Of these हि bears an affinity to भ्यम् and द्व्यम् surviving in युध्यम्, भ्रम्यम्, तुभ्यम् and मद्यम्; and through भ्यम् and द्व्यम् it is related to भ्याम्, भ्यस् and भिस्. The Sk. भ्यम् and द्व्यम् and the Pr. हि do not distinguish singular from the plural. त्तो, too, which is derived from Sk. तस्, makes no distinction of number as it is not originally a case termination. हिन्तो presents a combination of हि an 1 त्तो as सुत्तो does of सु an 1 त्तो. The superaddition of त्तो helps to avoid the confusion of the instrumental plural रुआहि and the ablative singular रुआहि. The nasal in हिन्तो and सुत्तो compensates for the loss of the first member of the conjunct त्तो.

i. 18¹³ प्रकृतिचित्परिज्ञाने—Here प्रकृति denotes citizens; see Med.—प्रकृति-र्गुणतये स्थादमायादित्वभावयोः । योनौ लिङ्गै पौरवर्गै. i. 18. The phrase अथ किम् implies अङ्गीकार; see Ha. 266. i. 18¹⁰ अथेऽप्य जअरे—Here अथेऽप्य (Sk. अहित) is an expletive. It is used as an introductory particle. In i. 18¹⁹ किंतु उग the particle उग also is an expletive. i. 18²¹ चन्द्रितिरिणो is equal to श्रीचन्द्रस्य, that is, श्रीमतश्चन्द्रस्य in संस्कृत. The inversion is warranted by the oft-quoted rule—प्राकृते लिङ्गवचनमतन्वं पूर्वनिषातानियमश्च. i. 18³⁵ समावेशिता literally means caused to be enjoyed; compare संविश्. i. 18⁴⁰, कायस्थ इति लक्ष्मी मात्रा—The term मात्रा here and in महामात्रा signifies ‘dignity’. कायस्थ, therefore, does not denote the caste, but signifies a scribe or clerk in the passage before us. i. 18⁴⁴ मणिकार—a pearl merchant; see K. K. II 113, रत्नावर्णीं जलवरा जनयन्ति किंन्तु संस्कारमत मणिकारागः करोति । श्रेष्ठो (श्रेष्ठं धनादिकमस्यस्य)—a rich man, a wealthy head of a guild. In place of जस्स गेहे of mss. I read जस्सिं (Sk. यस्मिन्) in the text corresponding to अनारमसदशे and चन्द्रनदासे in the next speech. See also Mk. I—पुरिसेसु णासा णिक्खिवीअन्ति ण उण गेहेसु. न्यासीकृत्य (अन्यासं न्यासं कृत्वा i. e. न्यासमिव समर्थं)—note the form. The terms बद्धपक्षवात्, प्रियवयस्य and सुहृत्तम mark and differentiate the degree of intimacy of राक्षस with जीवसिद्धि, शकटदास and चन्द्रनदास respectively. i. 18⁵⁴ प्रणय—attachment; प्रणविन्—having attachment, attached; hence ननु वक्तव्यं राक्षस एवास्मदङ्गुलिप्रणयी संवृत्तः—I here have राक्षस attached to my finger, so to say; that is, राक्षस will now seek me, he will, of himself, fall into my clutches. Compare Ku. V. II—कृतोऽक्षसुत्रप्रणयी तया करः and Amaru. 54, गृहागेमं मुष्ये नय च निजकण्ठप्रणयीताम्. चाणक्य means to say that the acquisition of the ring of राक्षस paves his way to bring about his surrender. In an instant he here forms, in his mind, the entire plan of severing राक्षस from मलयकेतु and securing him, which is detailed in the last three acts of the play. विस्तर meaning detailed description, should be distinguished from विस्तार signifying expanse; see P. III. 3. 33. 57. and Ak. विस्तारोऽप्यासः स च शब्दस्य विस्तरः i. 1871-72 mss add here पणामणिहुदा कुलवहु विअ. To me the portion appears spurious. The florid style ill suits the character of the secret agent. So I omit it. i. 18¹⁴ पञ्चवरिसदेसीजो—nearly five years of age; see P. V. 3. 67—हृषदसमाप्तौ कल्पदेश्यदेशीयरः अववरक् m. an apartment. See Sam. S. XVIII, 24, अल्पाल्पास्तु चतुर्कुड्या ये तेऽपवरका मताः. From it is derived ओरडो in गुजराती. The causal दापित stands for the primary दत्त. i. 1882 अस्यानुरूपं फलम्—an adequate reward of this, that is, employment in a more important secret mission. i. 18⁹² गृहीतो जयशब्दः—The customary salutation जेदु अज्जो is hailed by चाणक्य as an auspicious utterance presaging his triumph. i. 18¹⁰⁹ बृषलाद् भूपणानि प्रतिगृह्य—चाणक्य directs विश्वावसु and his brothers to see him on their way back; for the scheming king-maker wants to trump the ornaments through the first named on राक्षस without his knowing that they were of Parvata. In the latter part of the fictitious letter which is fathered on राक्षस these ornaments are described as presents from Chandragupta to राक्षस. i. 18¹¹¹ उत्तरोऽयं लेखार्थः—The fictitious letter is given in act-V. 917-25 infra.

i. 19. कौलूतः—The king of कुलूत modern Kulu. The kingdom is on the right bank of the Sutlej, south east of काश्मीर and north-east of the जालंदर Doab. It was a flourishing state in the 7th and 8th centuries. It is mentioned by वराहमिहिर, बाण and Yuan-Chwang. मलयनरपतिः सिंहनादः—The territory ruled by सिंहनाद (मलयनरपत) lay in the हिमालय between the Rapti and the Gandaki. Its situation is roughly indicated by modern Malebhum in नेपाल. The hillstate of Malayaketu was bounded on the east by मलयदेश, on the south by कुलूत and on the west by काश्मीर. The fictitious letter of the fifth act proposes the partition of the kingdom of Malayaketu by these three states. They must, therefore, be conterminous with it. It is to be presumed that the father of Malayaketu was called पर्वतक, पर्वतेश्वर or शैलेश्वर from his having ruled over पर्वतदेश. वराहमिहिर mentions the Pārvatiyas in his Bri. S. The fact of the king of the Pārvatiyas being designated मलयकेतु with which the reader is requested to compare विन्ध्यकेतु of Priy. D. induces me to suppose that the Pārvatiyas were an offshoot of the Himalayan Malayas. पारसीकधिराजः—The पारसीक country is Persia. It is mentioned by वाण in Heh. VII—नहसीय एवा-न्तरं तुचारनिरिगन्धमादनयोरुसाहिनः, किञ्चुस्तुरुकविषयः, प्रादेशः पारसीकदेशः, वाणपदं शक्तयानम्. चित्रगुप्तः प्रमार्दु—चाणक्य means that Chitragupta should not thenceforth be anxious about the five Mlechchha kings; for he would speed them off to the realm of यम even before the expiration of their full term of life. The sentence refers to their untimely and grueful end described in act V. चित्रगुप्त is the accountant of यम. It is his duty to see that no one exceeds the lease of life granted to him or her. Vide. स्थलविलजलान्तरालविहारिणां प्राणिनामथापि चित्रगुप्तेनापरिमृष्टमानत्वादनासादित्रहिंसः—Yas. II. 221, ll⁴-6. The figure of speech in the last line of the stanza is काव्यलिङ्क. i. 19¹ सर्वमनभिव्य-क्तमेवास्ताम्—चाणक्य changes his mind, as he wants to get the letter written by शक्तदास. i. 19³. प्रयत्नलिखितानि—inscribed with effort. अस्फुट—not graceful. In ancient times there was oral teaching and every thing was learnt by rote. Pundits knew how to write; but their writing lacked grace and ease. After अस्फुटानि the conjunctive particle च is understood. वस्त्र श्रोत्रेयाक्षराणि०—here and अहो दर्शनीयान्यक्ष-राणि—infra are meant to allay the suspicions of the pupil as to why चाणक्य got the letter written by another person. i. 194. केनापि stands for the correspondent, कस्यापि for the addressee and स्वयम् for the carrier, that is सिद्धार्थक in the present case. किमपि refers to the oral clue. वाच्यम् is the passive potential participle of the causal of वच्. i. 195. The suppression of the name of चाणक्य as the author of the letter to be written and the specific mention of सिद्धार्थक as its carrier are meant to hoodwink शक्तदास. बादानामन्—the address on the outer side of a letter, superscription. i. 19¹² मुद्रय—As regards the practice of stamping letters with red chalk (धातुद्रव) and such other material, see P.C. VIII. 34. i. 19¹³. MSS omit तथा करोति and read i. 19²⁴⁻³³ in continuation of the speech. Under this arrangement the order of the rescue of शक्तदास comes first and then there is the order of his impalement. That is, as they say, putting the cart before the horse. The order of impalement should have precedence over the order of rescue. I accordingly restore the textual sequence by rearranging the parts. i. 19¹⁶ कालपाशिको दण्डपाशिकः—The term दण्डपाशिकः (दण्डपाशो प्रहरणे अस्य, see P. IV. 4. 57.) denotes the head of the metropolitan police. It occurs in Bri. Kath. I. 2. 139. The word is also written दण्डपाशिक. In Panch. II. 2. it is mis-spelt दण्डपाशक and in Bri. Kath. I. 19.83.95.138.141.185. दण्डपाशिक, The name proper, of the officer here is कालपाशिक for he is inexorable like Yama whose weapon is कालपाश. The reading कालपाशिक is palpably wrong. i. 19²² अस्मच्छरीरम्—The first personal pronoun stands for चन्द्रगुत्त. i. 19²³ भयतंशः प्राहयेत्ययोः—should be made to experience the sense of fear. The fright and flight of the executioners implies an armed assault. So I insert त्वया गृहीतशब्देण before and भय after सरोष eliminating दक्षिणाक्षिसकोच which I take to be spurious. In support of the emendation see VI 1918 infra. भयापदेश—manifestation of fear. Before this MSS add गृहीतसंशेष which is pleonastic. I drop it. i. 19²⁵ अज्ञ गहोशो—This incomplete utterance of शकटवाम् coming after the speech अपि नाम दुरात्मा राक्षसो गृह्णेत of चाणक्य is construed by the latter as prophetic. It is an auspicious augury; and चाणक्य rejoices at it.

i. 20 चाणक्यमि अक्षरणे—The locative. चाणक्यमि stands for the instrumental; compare, भावे धणे पुणे ति मं भणादि । किं हगे शरावके कोट्टके कुभके वा । Mk. VIII, where धणे does the the office of धणेण; see Hai. V. VIII 3. 135, द्वितीयातृतीययोः सत्तमी. The Sk. pronominal case ending स्मिन् appears in Pr. as मि, सिं (Jain Pr. सि or अँसि) and हि॒ Of these सिं and हि॒ are applied to pronouns and म्मि to nouns and pronouus alike. The stanza contains the figure अप्रस्तुनप्रशंसा. i. 20¹⁵ The mss. read किं ण जाणादि अज्ञो. The interrogative construction is somewhat inappropriate in the mouth of the honey-tongued pearl merchant. I, therefore, read ण जाणादि अज्ञो. i. 20¹⁶ परिहवादो वि महन्ते—the positive महन्ते stands for the comparative. i. 20¹⁹. उचित-मेवेदमस्म०—The pronoun इदम् stands for the seat offered (आसनम्). There is a sly reference here to the close intimacy of the pearl merchant with the minister राक्षस. i. 20²³ अपि प्रचीयन्ते—This is the customary greeting to a tradesman; see अनेष्वैश्यम्. Ap. D. S. I. 4.14,18. The speeches अपि प्रचीयन्ते and अहाँइ॑ अज्जरस प्यसाधु अखण्डिदा वाणिजा॑ are general statements introductory to the particular question which follows. i. 20²⁷ न खलु चन्द्रगुप्तदोषा अतिक्रान्तपार्थिवगुगान् स्मारयन्ति प्रछ्रुतिः—The construction, though irregular, is sanctioned by usage. Compare Bk. XVII. 109, ततो मातिलिना शस्त्रमस्मार्थत महिपाते॒ः. i. 21 ण सरथ०. This metrical passage is turned into prose in manuscripts. There has been a similar transformation in the beginning of the first प्रवेशक of कौमुदी-महोत्सव, where the prose जहू साहगाँडवा सिलीमुहसणाहा वस्महसिहिणिभा कुसुमगुच्छादा दीर्घति असोभलक्खाण॑ stands for the अर्यां साहगाँइ॑ सिली-मुहसणाहोलम्बिभाइ॑ कुसुमाण॑ । गुण्ठा अ वस्महसिहि दिस्सन्ति असोभलक्खाण॑ ॥. i. 214-6 चन्द्रगुप्त �understands by प्रतिग्रिय what is technically spoken of as प्रणय in Ar.; so he makes the monitory offer. नन्दस्य अर्थहेः—King Nanda is said to have been very avaricious. His hoards were valued at ninety-nine crores of gold coins. He is said to have taxed hides or furs which had been never taxed before; see Jayaswal's Hind. Pol. II. 33; p. 164. अपरिक्लेश is the opposite of परिक्लेश, one of the varieties of दण्ड (punishment); see वधोर्यग्रहणं चैव परिक्लेशास्त्वयैव च । हृति दण्डविधानशैदण्डोऽपि ग्रिविधः स्मृतः ॥ काम. XVII. 9. Harsh measures such as imprisonment, torture &c., come under परिक्लेश. i. 21¹⁰ अणुगेहीदोषि—The pearl merchant expresses his thankfulness for the non-employment of harsh measures. i. 21¹¹ कीदिसो उण तिणाणं—This is a proverb; see कृशानुना सह तृणानां कीदेशः कलहः S. H. 16. The derivative adjectives कीदेशः and हृदेशः are equivalent to the primitive कः and अयम्. They are merely interrogative only and demonstrative in signification. Compare एताद्वाम् II. 173, तादेषु त्रीयाणां च लिखेदयेत्, अन्यथा.....दोषे भजेत् Ar. 2. 36. i. 21¹². For संन्नम् in the sense of dismay, panic, see Med. एवं हृद—Mark, the wily pearl merchant uses आसीत् and not अरक्ष्यत्. i. 21¹³ छल—चन्दनदास uses the word in the sense of blunder. चाणक्य takes it in the sense of trick, and calls upon the pearl merchant to exculpate himself from the charge of treason by delivering the family of राक्षस. For the senses of छल and अच्छल see Med. छलं स्वलितशास्त्रयोः and D. N. p. 11.1. 3. अच्छलमनपराधः! The editions MHT read वाआच्छलं (= वाक्छलम्). It is thus defined, अविशेषाभिहितेऽर्थे चन्द्रुरभिप्रायादर्थान्तरकल्पनं वाक्छलम् ।; see न्या. सू. I. 2¹⁴ 53. It is speaking at cross purpose. It may be either intentional or unintentional. The former is based on wilful misconstruction. The latter is simply a case of ignorant blundering. When चाणक्य says to चन्दनदास 'राक्षसस्य गृहजनं गृहेऽभिरक्षसि', he means that he has been sheltering the family of राक्षस in his house. The present आभिरक्षसि denotes the present perfect continuous tense. चन्दनदास takes it to denote the present continuous and denies the charge; for the family of राक्षस was not in his house at the time. Then चाणक्य slyly refers to the flight of the partisans of Nanda leaving their family with others without consulting their wishes, and adds that the concealment of the fact only constitutes a crime. चन्दनदास then says that the family of राक्षस was in his house at the time of the stampede. Thereupon चाणक्य accuses him of making conflicting statements.. This he refutes by saying that it is merely a case of ignorant blundering. Sharply blaming the pearl merchant for what he took to be wilful misconstruction, he returns to the charge of treason and asks him to give up the family of राक्षस. As the point turns on छल and अच्छल, I give preference to the reading of H. (be, M).

i. 22. विक्रान्तैर्नेयशालिभिः—The instability of sovereign power was instanced by the insurrection of चग्दगुप्त, the defection of Parvataka, the risings on the frontier of Sakas, Yavanas etc., The potential व्यवस्थेत् denotes अनवक्षुष्टिं (impossibility); see P. III, 3. 145. There is a fusion (संकर) of समासोऽकिं and उपमा in the stanza.

i. 23. आस्वादितद्विरद्.—The present द्वच्छति stands for the potential; compare K. P. 157, कुमुदिन्यपि दिनकरकानुरागीणी भवति । कमङ्गिन्यपि शशि-करद्वेषमुज्ज्ञति । निशापि वासरेण सह भिश्रतामेति । उग्रोत्तनायव्यक्तारमनुश्वते । छायापि प्रदीपाभिमुखमवतिष्ठते । तदिदपि जलदे स्थिरनां ब्रजति । जरापि यौवनेन संश्वारिणी भवति. The employment of the present indicative for the imperative and the potential points to the influence of प्राकृत on संस्कृत. So does also the use of participles for verbal forms. The stanza contains the fusion (संकर) of उपमा and अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा. i. 233. उत्सारणा०—Officers of justice are ordering people to move aside and make way for जीवावेद्धि who is being expelled from the town with disgrace. i. 231० अनुभूयतां चिरं०—I would like to read च in place of चिरं in order to link the sentence of which the words quoted above are a part, with the two sentences that go before. i. 231०. राक्षसकलप्रचादनम्—The generic term प्रचादन signifies screening a person in the house as also concealing his or her whereabouts.

i. 24. परसंवेदन—Surrender or betrayal of another, of pigeon in the case of शिवि and of the family of राक्षस in the case of चन्दनदास. संवेदन is here equivalent to निवेदन. शिविना चिना—King शिवि, of उशीनर near गांधार, was known for his great charity which was once put to test by Indra and Agni. The latter, in the form of a pigeon, was pursued by the former in the shape of a falcon. The pigeon took shelter in the lap of the king. The falcon demanded its prey, in lieu of which it would accept nothing but an equal weight of the king's own flesh. शिवि cut out a piece from his thigh and placed it in the balance, which was found wanting. He added piece after piece, but the bird proved heavier still. So he put his whole body in the balance. This outweighed the pigeon; and the falcon flew away. The pigeon which remained, solved the mystery. See Mb. III. 130,131. 20-24, 1-32 and Mb. III 196. 11-36. On another occasion a आश्रम went to शिवि and demanded food which was to be no other than the flesh of his son, Virhadgarbha, who should be killed and cooked for the purpose. The king did so and placed the food before him, when he asked शिवि to partake of it himself. He was just going to do so, when the आश्रम stayed his hand, extolled his devotion, and, restoring his son to life, disappeared. See Mb. III. 197. 21-31. and कथा VII. 88. 97. i. 241-2. अनुभूयतां तर्हि राजकोपः—चाणक्य means to say that the king will be highly displeased and will punish him severely. राजकोप here is contrasted with राजप्रसाद supra. In no way cowed down, चन्द्रदास defiantly tells चाणक्य to do his worst himself, at which the latter apparently flies into rage and is going to sentence him to death by impalement; but pretending to get him punished more severely, he commits his case to the unforgiving and relentless king who will order चन्द्रदास and his family, to be executed. It is on this account that the sentence शीघ्रमयं दुष्कृतिगिर्ह is left incomplete. चाणक्य was going to complete it with the words शूलमारोच्यताम्.

i. 25. त्यजत्यपियवत्—The prediction is literally verified in the seventh act. The figure of speech is अनुमान.

i. 252. प्रविश शिष्यः—On his way back from the gaoler's शार्वरव learns, of the forced release of शकटदास by सिद्धार्थ and of the subsequent flight of them. So he hurries to चाणक्य to apprise him of it. i. 256 संभावय—overtake, seize.

I. 26. दृष्टीर्थमाहेमा—fem. nom. sign. of the बहुवीहि base दृष्टीर्थमहिमन् without a suffix, or with the feminine suffix आ. The suffix ई would give feminine दृष्टीर्थमहिमनी. The stanza ये याता० contains the figure काञ्चणिलेङ्ग i. 261. The stage dissections प्रथक्षवदाकाशे लक्ष्य बद्धवा and आकाशमवलोकयन् should be distinguished from आकाशे. The former are used when a speaker addresses one that is absent as if he or she were standing in person before him. It is used to introduce an apostrophe. The latter presumes that the addressee is present behind the stage and within hearing.

I. 27. On आरण्यक गज see पाठ. 4. 30. An elephant not herding with others is called एकचर. The reading विगाहमानम् is not acceptable, inasmuch as विगाह. I. A. is transitive and requires an object to complete its sense in the active voice. विगाहमान—pervaded, penetrated. The stanza contains उपमा.

END OF ACT I called
The Signet Found.

Act II

II. 1. ततः प्रविश्याहितुष्टिकः—On the employment of spies in. the guise of यमराटेह, आहितुष्टिक etc. see Niti V. चारसमुद्देश. The double forms आहितुष्टिक (P. IV. 4. 21.) and आहितुष्टिक (Ak.) like दण्डपारिक and दण्डपारिक supra are authorised by the rule—संजापूर्वको विधिरनियः ।.

II. 1. जागरिति तन्त्र०—The stanza serves as a premonition (पताका-स्थानक) presaging the disgrace and downfall of राक्षस owing to ill-managed internal affairs, ill-judged external relations and ill-kept counsel is a counsellor of Prince Malayaketu. तन्त्र n—(1) medicine; (2) internal administration; see Vai. तन्त्रं स्वराष्ट्रचिन्तार्थं शास्त्री-पद्ममेल्वपि. In the text तन्त्र in the sense of medicine stands for विप्रतन्त्र, that is, an antidote. So तन्त्रयुक्ति means—(1) application of antidotes, and (2) art of internal administration. मण्डल—(1) the magic ring preventing the escape of the spell-bound serpent, see Hch. p. 125.—ज्ञेयगमनाशक्त्या रुध्यत् दश दिशः; (2) the zone of friendly, hostile and neutral states, see काम. VIII. मन्त्र—(1) spells; (2) political schemes. The figure of speech is लेप. I read ते सप्तगणिते उवभरन्ति (Sk. ते सर्पनृयानुभवरन्ति) to suit the scheme of the गायथा metre. If we accept the reading ते सप्तगणाहिते उवभरन्ति with mss. we get the गोति metre, the use of which is very rare in plays anterior to the 8th century A.D. ii. 11. भगासि and भगाह (act IV) are present indicative second person singular and plural of भण् with the final अ of the प्राकृत root changed to आ. ii. 12. The name जिष्णविस (=ज्ञोर्जविष) is very appropriately given to the snake-charmer; compare the names निपुणक, प्रियंवदक, करभक &c. अहं वि अहिणा खेलिदुँ इच्छामि—The speaker means that he likes to divert himself with snake sports; they are his favorite इष्ट sports. The snake-charmer takes him to mean that he wants to play with snakes away; and he puts him away with the words णं खेलदि ज्जेव०. This is speaking at cross purposes intentionally. iiiz राजकुल n.—The royal house hold, the king's household, that is, the household of Prince Malayaketu.

II. 2. This verse is turned into prose in mss. Construe नौषधि-कुशल हृति व्यालग्राही भत्त हृति मतकुजारोहो जितकाशिति राजकुलसेवकश्च नाश-मनुभवन्ति. Here हृति shows हेतु. नौषधि कुशल, like नशयान i. 14 is नश् तत्पुरुष समाप्त. जितकाशी (जितेन काशते हृति); compare मत्तकाशिनी. The figure of speech is दोपक.

II. 3. कौटिल्यधीरज्जु०—The verse bears the same import as the prose that goes before it. This is what मल्लिनाथ calls भग्नगत्तरकथन; see the commentary on. Si. 3. 13.—प्रायेणोकार्थमप्यनेकं श्लोकमुक्तिविदेष्व-लाभाङ्गिलित्स कवयः. This is indulged in by श्रीहर्ष in his N. to such an extent that it becomes irksome. The plural उपायहस्तै indicates plurality of statesmanly tactics. The figure of speech is रूपक.

II. 4. विरुद्धयोर्पूर्वशमिव०—The word वशा is used in a variety of senses; see Med. To restrict the sense गज is added to it. Hence there is no एकार्थतादोष here; see काव्यालं० सू० II. 2.12. न विशेषश्चेत्. The figure of speech is उपमा.

ii. 41. ततः प्रविशति०—Here the word सपरिजन. should be supplied. There are similar omissions in the stage directions of the fourth and fifth acts announcing the entrance of Malyaketu. This is evident from the stage direction प्रियंवदकः सपरिजनो निष्क्रान्तः succeeding in the second, कञ्चुकी सपरिजनो निष्क्रान्तः in the fourth and सपरिजनो निष्क्रान्तो मलयकेतुः in the fifth act.

II. 5. वृण्णीनामिव०—On the legend of the extermination of the यादवs see Mb. XVI. There is a union (संसृष्टि) of the figures उपमा and अतिशयोक्ति.

II. 6. नेदं विस्मृतभक्तिना०—The complex sentence may be construed as under:—स्वर्गतातोऽपि देवः शान्त्रववधेनाराधितः स्यादिति (कृत्वा) परदायमेत्य नीतात्त्वर्थ (च) निषुणं (च) मयेदं मनो दीयते. There are four adjuncts of मया namely (1) न विस्मृतभक्तिना, (2) न विषयव्यासङ्गमूदामना (3) न प्राणप्रचुतिर्भीरुणा and (4) नात्मप्रतिष्ठार्थिना, where the negative particle standing apart conveys the same sense as one compounded to form नन् समाप्तः. For शान्त्र (शान्त्रेव शान्त्रः) derived from शान्त्र with the स्वार्थ suffix अ, see. P. V. 4. 38.

II. 7. आनन्दहेतुमप्य०—On गन्धगज (गन्धप्रधानो गजः Madhyam. comp.) see Pal. यस्य गन्धं समाप्ताय न तिष्ठन्ति प्रतिद्विपाः । स वै गन्धगजो नाम नृपतीवर्जयावहः ॥ It is the strong scent of the ichoral exudation from his temples that puts to flight other elephants. The figure of speech is उपमा.

II. 8. काशप्रभवकुसुम—The blossoms which the काशा plant bears. Compare Mu.III. 24—तमालप्रभवकिसलय. The stanza पृथिज्ञा किं०—contains the fusion (संकर) of उपमा and अर्थान्तरन्यास. ii. 82. मया तावत् सुहृत्समस्य०—Here we have an enumeration of the measures taken by राज्ञस to avenge the death of Nanda. ii. 77. तसंहतिभेदन —causing disunion in the ranks of the enemy, particularly between चाणक्य and चन्द्रगुप्त.

II. 9. इष्टात्मजः सपदि०—There is a unión (संसृष्टि) of परिकर, उपमा and रुपक.

II. 10. धर्मो मैर्य इव ऋगेण नगरे नीतः प्रतिष्ठां मथि—At first the people of पाटलिपुत्र were not well-affected towards Chandragupta. But चाणक्य won them over by removing the grounds of disaffection one after another, and made the new king secure. This is implied by ऋगेण in the verse. अन्तर n.—room, footing. The figure of speech in the stanza is उपमा. ii. 10'-7 मद्विज्ञापनां मानयितुमर्हत्यार्थः—This request of Malayaketu is missing in the text as it stands. It should have been stated in the succeeding sentence. To recover the missing portion I drop कुमारेण.

II. 11. न तावञ्जिर्वर्त्यैः—सुगाङ् was the name of the Royal Palace in पाटलिपुत्र outside the town proper in the suburb of Kusumapura occupying the site of the small village of पाटलग्राम. It commanded a beautiful view of the Ganges; hence the name. Compare सुयामुन S. V. 6. With हेमाङ्ग सिंहासनम् compare हेमाङ्गो रथः Rām. III 49.19.

ii. 118. शायतां कोऽस्मद्दर्शनार्थी०—राक्षस is expecting news from पाटलिपुत्र. ii. 1118 I leave out प्रथमसेव which is found in MSS. here and in IV. 166 infra. Snakes were not the first thing to meet the sight of the Minister in one case, nor a Jāin ascetic in the other. There had been prior visitors, namely Jājali and Malayaketu. The sight of snakes and of a Jain ascetic is inauspicious at all times in the day, whether early or late. I therefore look upon प्रथमसेव as spurious.

ii. 1121-23. एसो खु दे दंसणफलेग अमच्चो०. As प्रियंघदक says this, he offers something to the snake-charmer which the latter politely declines.

II. 12. पाऊण गिरवसेसं०—the parable of the bee suggests that the information which the roving spy gives, having cleverly learnt all the gossip of Pushpapura, serves the purpose of the uninformed. पाऊण, from पा. १, p. signifies (1) having sucked and (2) having learnt. Compare काम XIII. 27,50. - जगतां मतं पिबन्तः, जगतां मतानि समापिबन्तः. The word रस, from रस, 1p. to taste or to sound, means (1) juice and (2) gossip. The root उद्भू 6 p. signifies (1) to eject or (2) to utter. भमरो is a term equally applicable to the wandering bee and the roving spy etymologically. Lastly, the ग्राकृत word अण is a derivative of संस्कृत अन्य (another) as well as अज्ञ (ignorant). The double entendre reminds राक्षस of the fact that the poet snake-charmer must be his spy विराधगुप्त in disguise. कृष्ण is related to Vedic कृष्णोति. There is a fusion (संकर) of कृष्ण and अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा here.

II. 13. वामां बाहुलतां—The figure of speech in this stanza is ख्वभावोक्ति.

II. 132. अये विराध—The minister, at the sight of his friend विराधगुप्त, so far forgets himself, that he calls him by his name in the hearing of प्रियवदक from whom it is to be kept back. When he half utters it, he perceives his mistake. Thereupon, turning to प्रियवदक, he tells him that he does not want him as he wishes to amuse himself with snake-sports. But, in his hurry to get the coast clear, he commits another mistake. The snake-charmer was called in apparently to hear his bardic recitals. Oblivious of this he says that he is going to have snake-sports for which he had, as he said, no curiosity. All this is due to an excited temperament. Later on when he hears of the rescue of शकटदास from impalement, he is beside himself with joy so far, that he calls विराधगुप्त by his name in the hearing of this self same प्रियवदक and asks him how शकटदास escaped his doom. इत्थर्वोक्ते विरुद्धसमृतिः—This is the stage direction of T. Compare with it इत्थर्वोक्ते सभयमधोमुखस्तिष्ठति in the 5th act of the play. The last term विरुद्धसमृतिः has been wantonly changed to विरुद्धस्मश्रुः, विरुद्धस्मश्री and प्ररुद्धस्मश्रुः in manuscripts and interpolated in the text with or without न or ननु to head it.

ii. 134. चन्द्रगुप्तस्य नन्दभवनप्रवेशात् प्रभृतिः—राक्षस wants to have a detailed account of the doings of दारूरम्भन् and other secret agents of his. Now the story of दारूरम्भन् who heads the list is intimately and inseparably connected with the entry of Chandragupta in the palace of Nanda. So I read नन्दभवनप्रवेशात् in place of नगरप्रवेशात् of MSS. The palace of Nanda was in the city proper.

ii. 136. आस्ति तावच्छक्ति—Before we come to the sentence proper चाणश्येनाहृथाभिः.....पूत्रवारः seven locative absolute clauses intervene. Of these the first runs as follows:—प्रस्ति तावच्छक्तयवन.....बलेश्वरधिभिरित्व.....प्रस्तुतादुपरहूद्वे कुसुमपुरमध्वरलोक्य.....सुरङ्गमेत्यापकान्ते....सर्वीर्थसिद्धौ. It contains a reference to the seige of पाटलेषुत्र by Chandragupta and his ally. At the mention of it राक्षस mistaking the words आस्ति उपरहूद्वम् to denote the present, gets very much excited and interrupts विराधगु त with the fiery speech आः मयि स्थिते.....येषामभीष्टं यशः, and, when gently corrected, gives vent to the lament कथम् । वृत्तमिदम्.....राक्षासानां सहस्रम् ॥ The spy uses अस्ति merely as an expletive standing by itself. राक्षस takes अस्ति उपरूदम् together in the sense of उपरूद्यते. शक्यवनकिरात०—The शक्स are the Scythians whose inroads began in the first century B. C. Their abode शक्स्थान्, modern Seistan in Afganistan, is mentioned by वाण in his Hch. The यवन्स are the Bactrian Greeks who ruled the Punjab in the second century B.C. The झिरात्स were the wild tribes inhabiting the hilly tracts near Kumaon and Nepal. The कास्त्रोज्जs dwelt in the Hindukooosh. The पारस्पिक्स were the Zoroastrian immigrants of the Kunnar valley. The बाल्हीक्स were the ancient inhabitants of Bactria or Bulkh. The synchronism of these races with Chandragupta is not warranted by history. The शक्स, the यवन्स, the कास्त्रोज्जs, the पारस्पिक्स and the बाल्हीक्स are all Trans-Indians tribes. I am therefore disposed to read तुषारस (a Trans-Indian tribe inhabiting तोखरिरतान) in place of किरातस (an Indian tribe) of mss. For the association of तुषारस with शक्स, यवन्स and पारस्पिक्स. see Pād. T. 24, शक्यवनतुषारपारस्पिक्म-गथकिरातकलिङ्गवल्लगकाशैः । नगरमतिसुदायुतं समन्तानमहिषकचोरकपाण्डव्य-केरलैश्च ॥.

ii. 1322-24. आः मयि स्थिते कः तुसमपुरमुपरोक्ष्यति—The author uses उपरोक्ष्यति to denote अद्यतनभविष्य. see. P.III. 3. 135. The editions add प्रवीरक प्रवीरक [v1. विराधगुस् H. (M.)] क्षिप्रमिदानीम् after this. In the succeeding stanza there is a general call to arms. It is not addressed to any particular person. Hence the mention of प्रवीरक or विराधगुस is not warranted. For this reason I drop the portion.

II. 143 The stage direction appears to be wrong. We should read शस्त्रं कोशे विसृज्य; for Rākshasa does not here throw the sword away, but only let it drop in the scabbard gloomily.

ii. 151. The particles अस्ति तावत् of ii. 1316. are followed by seven locative absolute clauses of which the first is composed of two parts, शक्यवन.....कुसुमपुरम् (ii. 1316-18) and अवलोक्य.....सर्वार्थसिद्धौ (ii. 151-3), linked together by the objective relation of कुसुमपुरम् and अवलोक्य inspite of the intervening three speeches. The case is similar to the interlinking of ii. 151-7. and ii. 163-4. From this point of view the insertion in mss. of ततः समन्तादुपरूद्य कुसुमपुरम् before the second part of the absolute clause is of doubtful propriety. So I omit the redundant portion.

ii. 152. वैशस् n. hardship, suffering; see माल. IX—धिगुच्छसित-वैशसम्. ii. 153-4. जयघोपणाभ्याघाताद्विसाहसानुभितान्तर्गरवासिषु is a बहुवीहा॒र compound going with युध्मासु. Here अनुभित is elliptically used for अनुभितभक्ति. नन्दराज्यप्रत्यानयन—the restoration of सर्वथासिद्धि.

ii. 16 कृष्णनेत्र—कर्ण was the son of Kunti by the god सूर्य before her marriage with Pāṇḍu. He was born equipped with an impenetrable armour and with a pair of ear-rings of miraculous virtue. When he grew up, Indra, in the guise of a ब्राह्मण, cajoled him out of the precious possession and gave him in return a javelin charged with certain death to whomsoever it was hurled against. He took, meaning to use it against Arjuna in future. But on the fifteenth day of the great battle of Kurukshetra, Ghaṭotkacha made a terrible onslaught at night, and कर्ण had to save himself and the Kauravas by hurling against him Indra's javelin which killed the demon hero and returned to Indra. Krishṇa expressed his great joy at the event. For he had intentionally victimized Ghaṭotkacha who was a राक्षस by his mother's side, to save Arjuna. See Mbh. III. 307-309 and Mbh VII. 180-182. In the stanza under notice विष्णु stands for कृष्ण who was an incarnation of that god. हैडिग्वेय is Ghaṭotkacha. He was so called because he was the son of हैडिग्वा by भीम; see Mbh. III. 155-157. In the term तद्रूप्य the prounoun तद् stands for चाणक्य as well as कृष्ण. The stanza is quoted in Alan. Kau. as an instance of समस्तवस्तुविषया सावयवा उपमा.

ii. 161. कामचारः (कामेन चारः)—a freak (स्वेच्छाचार). ii. 16⁴. The manuscripts read चन्द्रगुप्तस्य in place of वृशलस्य. It is by the latter appellation that चाणक्य speaks of or addresses Chandragupta. Following this practice of his I substitute वृशलस्य here. ii. 16⁹. तोरण is described as बहिर्द्वारालंकारदारुवन्ध in Tilaka on Rām. V. 10. ii. 16³³ शूलुत्तुलु m. n. or शूलुत्तुला f. is the girdle worn by males; see Ak. It is used by आण in Hch. p. 121 and in K.p. 119 in this sense. The goad with a pointed hook (अङ्कुश) and the staff with a tapering blade inside it (दण्ड or तोत्र) were the instrumnets with which they managed an elephant; see Pal. IV. 30.57. ii. 16⁴² अनर्थद्रुयम्—The deaths of Barbaraka and Vairodhaka served no political purpose (अर्थ). ii. 16⁴⁴ वैरोधकपुरःसरेण पदातिलोकेन—By Mauryan footsoldiers that marched in front of Vairodhaka who was mistaken for Chandragupta by them. लोष्टवातं हतः—note the namul construction, for which see P. III. 4,37,45. ii. 16⁵¹ योग signifies means of causing secret death; see Hch. 4—योगं स्वप्नेऽपिनेच्छान्ति ; K. p. 55, l. 23—मुनीनां योगसाधनम् , As S. Sū—विविधान् कुर्वते योगान्. In कथा. 19. 84 we come across प्रतियोग (means to counteract योग); in Mb. XII. 59. 42 we meet with चूर्णयोग (means of causing secret death in the form of a powder); and in Dk. p. 226-227 we read of योगनारी and योगाङ्गना a female homicidal agent). As regards the discolouration of a liquid by poison see Pal. 2. 6.—काली तु यदि गौरस्य छाया इयामाथ वा भवेत् । गौरी कालस्य वा छाया तज्जलं विषदूषितम् ॥ स्नेहः कालस्तु भवति हरिता दृश्यते सुरा । इयामं च जायते दुर्गं विर्वर्णं च जउ भवेत् ॥ उपनितं यदा तोयं नीलं पश्येन्नाराधिषः । विषेषस्तु मियेवं धीरत्स्तुपलक्ष्येत् ॥ ; Susr. K.—द्रवद्रव्येषु सर्वेषु क्षीरमयोदं कादिपु । भवन्ति विविधा राज्यः फेनबुद्दुदजन्म च ॥ ; and Kām VII 19-20—छायातिरिक्ता हीना वा स्याद्वसे विषदूषिते । दृश्यते राजिरुद्धर्वा च फेनमण्डलमेव च ॥ .

ii. 16⁵² The reading कनकभाजनस्य वर्णान्तरगमनम् ascribes the discolouration to the golden bowl, about which see Kām. 7-21—झोहानां च मणीनां च मलपङ्कोपदिग्धता । प्रभावसनेहगुहता वर्णस्पर्शवधस्तथा ॥ and V. V. 3. 80—मणिलोहमयानां च पात्राणां मलदिग्धता । वर्णरागप्रभारपर्शगरिवसनेहसंक्षयाः ॥

ii. 16⁵⁶. शयनाधिकृत—The officer of the sleeping palace; see शयन IV. 13 notes.

ii. 10⁵² विचित्रवध or चित्रवध is capital punishment by torture. Therein the victim is sometimes crushed to death by an elephant, see Dk. p. 67; or cut off limb by limb, see माल. 8. 115 etc.

II 17 ते एव तैः धातिताः—Here ते stands for Barbaraka, Dāruvarman, Abhayadatta, Pramodaka and Bibhatsaka with his crew. The first was killed by the second who dropped the arch of mechanical contrivance over him. The second in his turn was stoned to death by the Mauryan foot-soldiers attending on Vairodhaka mistaken for Chandragupta. The rest died at the hand of चाणक्य. तैः thus includes Dāruverman, the Mauryan foot soldiers and चाणक्य. The stanza is quoted in Alan. Kau. as an instance of the figure विषम.

II. 18. प्रारभ्यते न०—Guided by the presence of अपरित्याज्यम् in the preceding and its emphatic repetition in the succeeding speech, I have given preference to the reading प्रारब्धमुत्तणुा न परित्यजन्ति, over प्रारब्धमुत्तमगुणास्त्वामिवोद्घान्ति. II. 18.1. प्रारब्धमपरित्याज्यमेवेति प्रत्यक्ष भवतः । = प्रारब्धस्य भवतः ऐकानितकः अपरित्यागः प्रत्यक्षः । राक्षस here pays a compliment to विराधगुप्त for his unflinching devotion to the cause espoused by him. II. 18³. एव्य एतादृशो भवति—Here एतादृशम् is equal to एतद्; see the note on कीदृशः and दृशः in act I supra. ii. 18⁸ न निष्परिग्रह०—The term परिग्रह m. signifies wife and family as well as property.

II. 19. स्वस्मिन्-परिहृत०—construe as under:—यस्य तवं एकमपि नीतिबिजं स्वस्मिन् अथाः परिहृतम् अस्मासु च पातितम् अर्धराजयहरः (च) घातितः (हृत) बहुफलतामेति. We have thus to supply हृति explaining बहुफलता by the enumeration of the result of the sentence of banishment of जीविभिद्धि.

II. 194. On अयुक्तरूपः (परिपूर्णतयायुक्तः) see P. V. 3. 66; compare वरत्ररूपः Ich. p. 225. II. 197. The sentence is incomplete. The speaker completes it in ii. 21. He is interrupted by राक्षस whose speech, ii. 20 gives it different turn which is meant to substantiate his previous statement वयमेव शोद्याः &c. Compare Mu. VII 51-5.

II. 20. Contrue अमुमेवार्थं नालम्ब्यापि तु जिजीविषामालम्ब्यासमाभिः कृत्वैः परलोकगतो देवो नानुगम्यते ।

II. 21 Construe अमुमेवार्थनालम्ब्य न तु जिजीविषामालम्ब्य युक्तभिः कृतैः परलोकलगतो देवो नानुगम्यते । T. inserts अमात्य नैतदैवम् before the stanza. The insertion would disjoin ii. 21 from, ii. 197 with which it is inseparably connected. So I omit it. ii. 212 एतदुपलम्ब्य०—The demonstrative pronoun एतद् stands for एम्य एतादृशं भवतीत्यन्वेषणम्. ii. 214 नन्वयुक्ततः सुहृद्दोहः—Vide the following stanza ascribed to Vyāsa —मित्रद्रुहः कृतप्रस्य खानस्य पिशुनस्य च । चतुर्णा वयमेतेषां निष्कृतिं नैव शुश्रुमः ॥. ii. 219 गृहीतसारः (from सार n. wealth) compare गामात्तसाराम्—R. v. 26.

II. 22. दृष्ट्वा मौर्य०—The stanza contains the figure उपमा. आधात्-तूर्थ m. n.—musical instruments proclaiming the execution (आधात्) of a person.

II. 23 अक्षीणभवितः०—There is a fusion (संकर) of विभावना and काव्यलिङ्ग here. प्रमाण n. measure or mark (of eminence). ii. 232. कौटिल्यगोचरगतः—Here गोचर m. means grip, hold; compare कः कालस्य न गोचरान्तरगतः. ii. 2310 कामम् expresses admission; see A. S. and compare Mv.1—कामं शशुरिति वध्यः स्यात्. ii. 2314 इमाए मुद्दाए मुद्दिभ—This is a sly attempt of सिद्धार्थक to draw the attention of राक्षस to the signet ring which he purposed to make over to him agreeably to the instructions of चाशक्य. ii. 2323 ब्राह्मणी—a ब्राह्मण wife; Vide K. p. 73, l. 11, शुक्रानास्त्वापि ज्येष्ठायां ब्राह्मण्यां.....तनयो जातः. ii. 2229 अमर्च किं एथ जुञ्जदि—सिद्धार्थक puts this question to राक्षस to draw him out.

ii. 2311 MSS. add before दीयतामेजा । the following sentence तद्रितो बहुतरेणार्थं भवन्तमात्यस्तोषयिष्यते . But as far as we know, no return is made to सिद्धार्थक by राक्षस for the restoration of the ring. Nor does सिद्धार्थक expect any return for making over to राक्षस what was his. So I strike out the sentence.

ii. 2334 सिद्धार्थक hands the ring over to शक्तदास to be presented to राक्षस. The latter tells शक्तदास to keep it with him for use in official correspondence.

ii. 2351 अपि क्षमन्तेऽस्मदुपजाये प्रकृतयः—Here the manuscripts read चन्द्रगुप्तप्रकृतयः and प्रकृतिस्था अमात्यादयः. But the machinations of राक्षस are as much directed against king Chandragupta as against the other members of the body politic; and the first instance of their success which the spy relates to राक्षस is that of king Chandragupta being much displeased with चाणक्य. So the readings are inadmissible.

ii. 2353 ननु प्रकाशमवगम्यते—Here ननु expresses certainty (अवधारण). ii. 2362 कार्य.....करभकहस्तेन संदेष्यम्—Here हस्तेन denotes agency or channel of communication. ii. 2359 वैतालिकञ्चजनः (वैतालिकस्येव ज्यज्जनं यस्य) is व्याधिकरणबहुबीहि; see काउलं सू. v. 2. The name स्तनकलश is unusual and inappropriate in the case of a person of the male sex. So I read स्तवकलश.

ii. 234 The variant अलंकरणसंजोआ, which is equivalent to आभरणसंजोआ of माल. VI. 83, and अलंकारसंयोग of नाट्य. द्वा. 24 39, signifies necklaces; see चाह. P. 47 —णाणापट्टासमागदेहि षेषमेहि मुत्तज्ञा संवाह्नी-आन्ति संओजीअन्ति अहारराप्यआराणि । सुवण्णभारा अलंकारप्यआराणि आदरेण जोअन्ति. MSS. have ता पञ्चकर्खीकरेदु अमस्त्चो—Here the object of the transitive verb पञ्चकर्खीकरेदु is missing. I suspect ता is a clerical error for ते (Sk. तान्). It is a common mistake in manuscripts, gaining perpetuity in print; rule Bh. III. 101 मित्रामित्रसमानताते-विमला चिन्तातिश्चून्यालथे.....योगी सुखं तिष्ठति ॥ which should be मित्रा...चिन्तेति.....तिष्ठति, Mk. 8. 172-गोणा मले which should be गोणा मला, and Si. XIII. 24. तदेति which should be तदाति.

ii. 2368 परितोष्य विक्रेतारं—apparently विश्वावसु only has been employed by चाणक्य to sell the ornaments to राक्षस.

ii. 24. तेजस्—the superlustre with which mighty rulers are endowed; see IV 10 infra. For अन्तर of the compound लघान्तरा in the sense of छिद्र (a failing or weak point) see Med. The imperiousness of Chandragupta and the arrogance of चाणक्य are the failings referred to. The figure of speech is अनुमान.

END OF ACT II
called
The sale of ornaments.

ACT III.

iii. 1 विषयs or इन्द्रियार्थs are five in number, namely रूप, रस, शब्द, स्पर्श and गन्ध. The term अर्थ in स्वार्थ stands for इन्द्रियार्थ. The करणs are the organs of sense, and the अंगs are the organs of action. आत्मलाभ here means one's gains and not birth. For how can तृष्णा be said to observe a sensuous object first and then to come into existence? अव्योधकियाः हताः signifies literally, 'The operations of cognition are impaired or stopped.' iii. 12 कौमुदीमहोत्सव—This festival was held on the full-moon day of the month of कार्त्तिक. कुमुद denotes a night lotus. It blooms luxuriantly in the शरद् season. The month of कार्त्तिक in particular is favourable to the blossoming of Kumula flowers. In the संकेत on Hch. p. 66.—दशंकर interprets कुमुदमयकाल by कार्त्तिकादि. The month is on that account called कौमुद, see Vai.—कार्त्तिके स्यात् कार्त्तिकिको बाहुलः देषषकौमुदी. After it the कार्त्तिक full-moon festival is named कौमुदी; See कौमुदी कार्त्तिकोत्सवे—Tri. S. 541, also संकेत on Hch. 66—कौमुदी कार्त्तिकी उप्रेत्नना. In Kā. Sū. the Kau-mudi festival of the full-moon of कार्त्तिक is distinguished from the आश्वयुजी festival of the full-moon of आश्विन. वास्त्यायन gives the names कौमुदी and कौमुदीजागर to it. It was a night of moonlight promenade and merry-making. That the festival fell on the full-moon of कार्त्तिक is proved beyond doubt by the reference to the awakening of विष्णु in iii. 20 infra. iii. 15 उपोद्घात means recital, mention; see Ak--उपोद्घात उदाहारः, see also Jagaddhara on Ve. i. उपोद्घात उवितः।

iii. 2. The employment of सिंहाङ्कासन for सिंहासन involves अवाच्यवचनदोष, to remove which one has to resort to लक्षण. The case may be stated and explained away thus in the words of मण्डिनाथ सिंहशब्दाङ्कत्वमासनशब्दस्यैव न तु संज्ञिनस्तदर्थस्य । इति शब्दपरस्यासनशब्दस्यार्थ-गतत्वेनाप्रयोजयस्य प्रयोगाद्वाच्यवचनाख्यो दोषः । अत्र सिंहशब्दविशेषितेनासन-शब्देन शब्दपरेण धरण्या धारणयोग्यः सिंहासनार्थो लक्ष्यते । इति समाधानं कर्थचित् संवादाम् ॥; see Malli. on Me. 42, Ki. xvii. 44 and Si. I. 42. There is; a union (संसृष्टि) of समासोचित and उप्रेक्षा in the stanza.

iii. 3. The double meanings may be noted. विश्रद्ध—(1) trusty (2) firm. In the latter sense compare Guj. सञ्चू. अङ्ग—(1) members of the body-politic; (2) members of the human body. विषम पथिन्—(1) a critical situation; (2) a rugged path. दम्य—(1) a novice to be trained; (2) a young bull to be broken. रस्तू signifies stumbling, moral as well as physical. There is an implication (ध्वनि) of the figure रूपक here developed by the double entendre noted above.

iii. 4. In the second line of the stanza क्षितिपतिः is to be taken to mean क्षितिपतिशब्दः as noted by Prof. तारानाथ. The figure of speech here is अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा. iii. 4। आत्मवत्—आत्मसंपद्; for आत्मसंपद् see काम. 4. 15.—19. 1. 23.—24.

iii. 5. लवधप्रसरा (लवधः प्रसरः प्रणयः यथा) who has received solicitations of love (from many quarters), much courted. For प्रसर in the sense of प्रणय see A. S. XI. 13—प्रसरस्तु सज्जने प्रणये जने; and compare T. M. 17, l. 23, उपालवधरयेव लवधप्रसरया श्रिया. The stanza contains उपमा. iii. 52 स.....पातकमिद—Compare A. P. 168. 25—अनृते च समुक्तर्षो राजगामि च देशुनम् । गुरोश्चार्णिकानिर्बन्धः समाने ब्रह्महत्याम्॥.

iii. 6. अङ्कुश m.—a curb. अतिस्वातन्त्र्येभ्यः—from those who take much freedom. It is a bahuvrīhi compound. स्वातन्त्र्य, being an abstract noun can not be used in the plural number in Sanskrit. So the readings of the forth line accepted in M. T. H. are rejected.

iii. 7. शनैः modifies स्यन्दन्ते. श्येनीभूताः—made white. For श्येन in the sense of white see Heh. p. 56. l. 6. क्वचिच्छकुनिकुलकुलायपातिनः श्येनाः (प्रत्यदशन्त दावाम्बयः); see also A. S. 300, श्येनः शुद्धे पतनिणि । सारस—a swan. विक्च (क्च to shine)—bright. नभस्तः—The suffix तस् here denotes the locative relation, not the ablative; see P. v. 3. 14—हृतरा भ्योऽपि दृश्यन्ते । and compare Si. XVI. 77—नियतं दधते च विन्द्रैरवियोगं पृथगण्डशैलतः. The stanza contains उपमा. The readings श्यानीभूताः, शान्ता भूताः &c., do not help us in the comparison of the quarters and rivers in autumn. They are practically useless. The conjectural emendation श्येनीभूताः सितजलधरच्छेदपुलिनैः brings the comparison into bold relief. Referring to each particular sight before him the speaker uses the demonstrative pronoun in the next two stanzas. In conformity with this practice I read दिश इमाः instead of दश दिशः of MSS., which is open to objection as all the ten quarters are not under observation. श्यानीभूताः and सितजलधरच्छेदपुलिनैः seem to be clerical errors for श्येनीभूताः and सितजलधरच्छेदपुलिनैः.

iii. 8 उद्दृक्त—(1) overflowing the banks, flooded; (2) gone astray. स्थितिपथ—(1) proper channel; (2) line of propriety. अवनति—(1) stooping; (2) bowing. In the last line कृतः signifies शिक्षितः (taught);

see Bhāguri—शिक्षिते कृतमर्थवत्—quoted in पदचन्द्रिका on D. K. 72. Compare Ki. II. 33—सुकृतः (सदभ्यस्तः Mallinatha); compare also कृतास्त्र, कृतपुष्ट्य, कृतविद्य, कृतशिर्य, कृतहस्त &c. There is a fusion (संकर) of श्लेष, उपमा and उत्प्रेक्षा.

iii. 9. The dark look of the stream made turbid in the rainy season is represented as the angry scowl of the river-goddess representing the love which the ocean-god professed to other rivers. At the close of the rainy season the Ganges shrinks in volume; and this is figuratively spoken of as pining away in sullenness. The river resumes its proper course in शरद् and with a placid stream flows down to the ocean. The season is on that account poetically described as restoring good feeling between the cross lovers. The root नी is one of those that take an akathita object in addition to the direct object; see P. I. 4.51. There is a fusion (संकर) of उपमा and श्लेष here. iii. 92 अथासमज्जना—The particle अथ here introduces a question.

iii. 10 For धूर्ति in the sense of विट see Med. The quarter where courtesans live is वेदा. स्वामीनः, derived from स्व (wealth) according to P. V. 2. 126—स्वामिदेश्वर्ये, here signifies rich persons. पार्वण विचित्र—celebration of the festival. iii. 101 एवमेतत्। एवमिदम्—That the कौमुदी festival is not celebrated in Kusumapura is on this account—. The chamberlain stops here, hesitating to give out the reason. Repeatedly urged to do it in an angry and imperative tone he gives it—प्रतिचिद्धः कौमुदी महोत्सवः. In the two incomplete speeches, एतद् and इदम् stand for the statement अप्रवृत्तकौमुदीमहोत्सवमयापि कुसुमपुरम् of the foregoing speech; and एवम् states the reason why, in reply to the interrogative कथम्. The pleonasm denotes confusion.

iii. 11 कृतग्न् usually means one who has committed a wrong (कृतमागो येन). It here signifies one who has been wronged (कृतमागो यस्य).

iii. 12 The reading कुसचिच्चिवट्ट० appears to be a blunder. For in i. 22 supra, चाणक्य calls the ministers of Nanda विक्रान्त, नयशालिन् and सुसचिव; and of Rakshasa he has a high opinion. So I read सचिवविमृष्ट०.

iii. 13 The particles छिल and नाम respectively express निश्चय and स्मरण. The reading भेदकुशलोऽस्त्वेष is to be rejected, because of गभीवाक्यता. The stanza is quoted in Kā. to illustrate अर्थासाक्षान्नैपुण्य.

iii. 14. उन्मुखदर्शन and अपलपन express deference and flattery. अपलपन is the same as अपलाप for which see Med.—अपलापः प्रेम्यपद्मवै.

Compare Gujarati અલાવું. અમરસિંહ gives શ્વરૂપિઃ as a synonym of સેવા. See also Ms. IV. 6—સેવા શ્વરૂપીતાખુષીતા. Note how much the speaker dreads the wrath of the king on one hand and the displeasure of the minister on the other.

iii. 15. Cowdung cakes, कुश grass and sacrificial sticks mark out चाणक्य for a श्रोत्रिय; and the mention of pupils shows that he was a great teacher. गोमय, primarily meaning cowdung, by लक्षण here signifies cakes of dried up cowdung. The figure of speech is स्वभावोक्ति.

iii. 16 Taken in continuation of the preceding sentence the stanza स्तुवन्त्यश्रान्ता० illustrates the figure अर्थान्तस्त्वयास.

iii. 17 In the stanza यो नःदमौर्य० the attributes which properly belong to धार्मा are transferred to यः. If we strictly observe the canons of rhetoric, we should read प्रगृहीतलोकेनास्तोदयौ प्रदि-शताप्रतिभिजकालम्, or some such thing. There is a fusion (संकर) of व्यासंख्य and व्यातिरेक. iii. 17²—आर्य प्रणतिसंभ्रम०—This speech of the chamberlain is illustrative of euphemisms mentioned in the previous stanza.

iii. 18 नन्दैवियुक्त०—Bad rulers duly punished, a good prince duly rewarded and the throne graced by a worthy occupant are the three sources of gratification. सदृश means worthy here; see R. 14. 61 श्रुतस्य किं तत् सदृशं कुलस्य; see also A. S. 1328, सदृशं तच्चिते तुल्ये ।. गुण signifies उत्कर्ष, for which see Mallinatha on Ki. X. 25—गुणमहतां महते गुणाय योगः. The figure of speech is समुच्चय.

iii. 19 नैकरागस्फुरितमणि—Pearls shining with varying brilliancy. For राग in the sense of brilliancy (स्विष्ट) see Vai.—रगोऽनुरागे लाक्षादी त्विषि. आगत्यागत्य—The repetition expresses नित्यत्व; see P. VIII. I. 4. The particle आ denotes अभिविधि in the first and मर्यादा in the second instance; see P. II. 1. 13.

iii. 197 कोमुदीमहोत्सवप्रतिषेधस्य०—Chandragupta was going to complete the speech by adding विज्ञापयितुम्. But the interruption of चाणक्य gives it a different turn by connecting it with उपालब्धम्. The connective is इति, which has been supplied by me. iii. 19¹⁰ विज्ञापनी-यानाम्.....शिर्ष्येण—The plural indicates the dignity and importance that the speaker arrogates to himself. iii. 19¹² न कदाचिह-प्यायस्य निष्प्रयोजना प्रवृत्तिः—This speech is logically connected with iii. 19⁶ by causal relation. So the clause इत्यरित नः प्रभावकाशः I tugged to it in MSS. is an encumbrance. Its arrogant tone ill accords with with the sweet complacence of iii. 19⁶. On that account I omit it.

iii. 19^{१७} हृष्टवर्थः—Not only does चाणक्य withhold the explanation demanded by Chandragupta, but he actually cuts him with a direct insult. iii. 19^{२०} नेपये वैतालिकौ—These bards are not the paid panegyrists of the court, but itinerant rhapsodists living on the bounties of kings; see U. प्रस्ता०—सूत्रो । एहि । राजद्वारमेव स्वजातिसमये-नोपतिष्ठावः । नटः—तेन हि निरूपयतु सुपरिशुद्धामुपस्थानस्तोत्रपद्धति भावः ॥. The bestowal of the largess is otherwise not accountable.

iii. 20 आकाशं काशपुष्पं—‘The काश grass grows from ten to fifteen feet high, and the base of the flower is surrounded with an immense quantity of bright silver-coloured wool which whitens all the fields’. अभिभवता, like जयति and others given by दण्डन् in K. v. ii. 59, 63, implies सादृश्य (similarity). क्षेत्रती, from क्षेत्र P. 9, to hurt, impair, discolour, means discolouring, whitening. iii 20 ऐमी कृत्ति the skin of the demon Gaja who was killed by शिव. For the comparison of कपाल and कुमुद see Ki. XII. 24. The stanza invokes शिव for protection as its sequel does विष्णु. This is clear from the following remark of चाणक्य, प्रथमं तावद्विशिष्टदेवतास्तुतिरूपेण शरदगण-प्रख्यापनम् (iii. 23¹-2). So I read हरतु शरदिव क्षेत्रमैशी तनुर्वृः. The MSS. transpose शरद् and तनुः, which is not warranted by पाणिनि. The double displacement is a clerical error similar to that of रेखा and काकुः in P. R. VI. 30, सरसमधुररेखा स्वीकृता कापि रेखा which should rightly be read सरसमधुररेखा स्वीकृता कापि काकुः. What a mess the blunder of copyists has caused, may be seen in the interpretation of the stanza by commentators and editors. The figure of speech is उपमा.

iii. 21 आकेकर is derived from केकर (squinting). आकेकरा हृष्टि is thus defined:—दृष्टिराकेकरा किञ्चित्स्फुटापाङ्गे प्रसारिता । मीलितार्धपुटालोके ताराभ्यावर्तनोत्तरा ॥ Its scope is defined as under:—आकेकरा दुरालोके विच्छेदप्रोक्षेतेषु च ; see Nāt. Sā. VIII. 88. Since आकेकर itself signifies looking somewhat obliquely, जिह्वा is rendered by dim, weak; see A. s. 333, जिह्वास्तु कुटिले मन्दे ; see also Ki. i. 4 ; दीसिसंसहारजिह्वाम् ; and Nāg. V. 63, व्याजिह्वारत्नावपः. By रत्नदीप the poet means the jewels (नागमणि) on the hoods shining like lamps. The stanza is quoted by वार्गभट in his Kā as an instance of भावशान्ति. The figure of speech is स्वभावोक्ति.

iii. 22 The panegyrist स्तबकलश who is a friend and agent of Rākshasa, recites this stanza and the next to incite Chandragupta. सत्त्व means that energy which never flags but carries every thing before it; see उपाध्यायानेरपेक्षटीका on Kām. I. 15—सत्त्वं प्रारब्ध-

iii. 23 As to the practice enjoined on kings to appear in public in full regal state, see Ram II. 100. 51—काञ्छिद् दर्शयसे नित्यं मातुषाणं विभूषितम्। उत्थायोत्थाय पूर्वाङ्गे राजपुत्र महापथे ॥. With the latter half compare the Sūtra आज्ञाफलमैश्वर्यम् of चाणक्य. Compare also आज्ञाफलोपचर्यमैश्वर्यम्—Ye. II. 56, l. 7, and राजयं किमाज्ञाफलम्—Bh. I. 103 iii. 23। विशिष्ट.....स्तुतिरूपेण—while invoking principally. iii. 232 गुणप्रख्यापनम्—describing secondarily. For गुण in the sense of अप्रधान see Med. and compare गुणीभूत, गुणकर्मन् and गुणघृत्ति. iii. 233 दुरात्मन् राक्षस दृश्यसे &c.—Though there is no stage direction to indicate it, this is an apostrophe to राक्षस. iii 23¹² एते रक्षकर्मण्याभिः—The duties here referred to particularly are those mentioned in the following verses of Kāmandaka:—प्रशास्त्राध्यक्षेनानां भव्यामात्यपुरोधसाम् । सम्यक् प्रचारविज्ञानं दुष्टानां चावरोपणम्। भूताभूतपरिक्षानं कृताकृतपरीक्षणम्. iii. 23⁸. प्रथमं तावन्मदाज्ञाव्याघातः—Here प्रथम denotes eminence and not number; see Med. and compare प्रथमसुङ्गमलयमात्तः—Dk. 133, प्रथमः कल्पः—M. I. 40, आशादृश्य प्रथमदिवसे—Me. 2. In the last instance it means आशादृश्य शयन्येकादशेनामके प्रधानवासरे agreeably to what is said in Me. 1. and 115. आज्ञाव्याघातः—(1) आज्ञाया अव्याघातः, (2) आज्ञाया व्याघातः.

iii. 24. मालेवाङ्मा सपुत्रा—By माला we necessarily mean a garland of flowers. So सपुत्रा is redundant. It is therefore, changed to सुपुत्रा by me. The stanza under notice is quoted in अलं कौ. as an instance of the figure व्याघात. iii. 24¹ लेखपत्रम्—a leaflet that notes down, a list. iii. 24¹⁰-। Here the term signifying the cause of the flight is wanting. I supply the deficiency by adding अपरागाद् before अपक्रम्य. The words परिमाण and प्रथमं तावद् of MSS. are superfluous; so I drop them. It may be noted that there is no numbering of the malcontents who had fled away. iii. 24¹¹ On गजाध्यक्ष and अश्वाध्यक्ष see Ar. iii. 24¹² स्वजनगन्धी (स्वजनस्य गन्धः स-स्वन्धोऽस्यास्तीति) signifies ' bearing the relation of a kinsman, a relative.' For गन्ध in the sense of संबन्ध see Abb. Ch. 252 and compare गन्धेनापि पुरपूर्मगन्धानामन्धभिवन्ति ग्राणानि—T. M. 121, l. 7, and आत्-

गन्धिनम्—Rām IV. 12, 13. iii. 2413. कुमारसेवकः कुमारावस्थायाः प्रभूति सेवकः; see Com. on Dk. p. 217. iii. 2414. With गणमुख्य compare बलमुख्य. iii. 25. infra. Though no longer ruling the country, Kshatriyas were highly esteemed by the new race of kings on account of their valour. They formed the pick of the standing army; see Kām. IV. 6.—अद्वैयक्षत्रियप्रायो दगडो दगडविदां मतः; and Yes 388.87—क्षत्रपारं..... श्रिये सैन्यं वृथेव मुण्डमण्डली. iii. 2417 अत्र यावेतौ—Of the fugitive malcontents भद्रभट and पुरुदत्त are कुदकृत्य, दिङ्गरात and बलगुप्त are लुब्जकृत्य, राजसेन and भागुरायण are भीतकृत्य, and रोहिताक्ष and विजयवर्मन् are अवमानितकृत्य. iii. 2429 आत्मनोऽनन्तरममात्यपदम्—the post of the minister in attendance, that is, private secretary. iii. 2437 श्रूयतामवधायीतां च—Note the phraseology of the class room. iii. 2440 राज्यस्य नुलं हस्तश्वम्—See. NitiV. बलसमुद्देशः। बलेषु हस्तिनः प्रधानमङ्गम् अश्वबलं च सैन्यस्य जडः; प्राकारः see also Kām. XV 10. 12. हस्त्य-श्वमवसादयेत्—see Pal I. V. 58-60, and Ar. iii. 2447 उपगृहातास्मत्कृत्य-पक्षः—Here T omits कृत्य and M. H. substitute भृत्य for it. Now चाणक्य does not refer to men of his party in general, but to the malcontents in particular. I regard भृत्य as a slip of copyists. iii. 2449 चायाम—military activities. Sās. 193 takes it to mean पौरुष. iii. 2449 तुर्गसंस्कार—furnishing the fort with means of defence. iii. 2455 अनुपेक्षणे हृषी गतिः—The question of निग्रह and अनुग्रह is dealt with here from Malayaketu's point of view. He already suspected चाणक्य of having perfidiously murdered his father. The use of force would have been regarded by him as a further proof of the perfidy of चाणक्य. Even the bestowal of Parvataka's portion of the conquered territories would have been looked upon by him as a wicked device of चाणक्य to wipe away the stain of the murder of Parvataka, viewed as too powerful a rival of his protege Chandragupta. iii. 2458 कुरन्तामाल—Here माल n. signifies 'the simple measure of anything, the one thing and no more,' and is translatable by mere or merely. iii. 2461 राक्षसोऽपि स्वामिनि—The passage sets forth the triple force of the dynamics of politics at the command of राक्षस. The possession of men (सहायसंपद्) and means (कोश) bespeaks his प्रभुत्वाक्षिकि; his political genius (प्रज्ञा) betokens his मन्त्रशास्त्रि; and his valour depicts his उरसाहशास्त्रि. कोशवान्—The treasure, here alluded to, belonged to the late king Nanda. He had amassed fabulous wealth amounting to ninety nine crores; see. iii. 27. infra. On the capture of पाटलिपुत्र by Chandragupta the major portion of it was appropriated by Rākshasa to be of use to him in the war to be waged for the restoration of Sarvārthaśiddhi. The rest was thrown into the waters of the Ganges; see Prof. S. K. Aiyangar's Beginnings of South Indian History p. 89. iii. 24⁶⁴ On अन्तःकोप and शास्त्राकोप see Kām. xv. 19. 21. As regards the greater danger of the former see Ki. ii. 51, अणुरयुपहृति विग्रहः प्रभुमःतःप्रकृतिप्रकोपः । The term अन्तर्नगर is opposed to शास्त्रानगर. It occurs in Mal. iv. 28. iii. 24⁶⁷ ननूपावैरेवासौ—By उपाय the author means in particular उपेक्षा. The plural refers to its frequent operation. On the efficiency of उपेक्षा see the following verse:—यच्छक्तावयुपेक्षन्ते कदाचिदपकाणिम् । समूलदारं कषितुमुपायोसौ न मूर्खता—Subhāsh. 2677.

iii. 25 स हि भृशो—The particle अथ expresses पक्षान्तर. अःयुपाय and उपाय are identical in meaning. The connivance at the flight of Rākshasa, the severance of the latter from Malayaketu, the hocus-pocus of suicide by the pretended friend of जिणदास, the sentence of impalement to Chandanadāsa, the assumption of the character of executioners by सिद्धार्थङ् and समूद्रार्थङ्, the offer of premiership to Rākshasa and the elevation of Chandanadāsa to the post of सर्वनगरश्रीष्ठेन् successively describe the courses of उपेक्षा, भेद, इन्द्रजाल, दण्ड, माया, साम and दान. The present indicative असि stands for the potential.

iii. 26 कृत्वा पदं नो गले literally means planting his foot on our neck, that is, causing a lot of trouble to us. The stanza contains the figure समुच्चय. iii. 26¹ विहस्य—This is a laugh of scorn. iii. 26² मया युनश्चातें—This is said in irony. iii. 26³ किमन्नार्थस्य—आरिमन् वस्तुनि आर्थस्य किं चेष्टितं कः पराक्रमः । Chandragupta means to say that it was the doing of Fate and not an achievement of चागवण.

iii. 27 आरुढ raised up, excited. नवनवितिशतद्वयकोटीश्वरः—The Nandas were masters of ninety-nine crores of gold coins, not of ninety-nine hundred crores; see Kathā. iv. 15—नवाधिकाया नवते: कै दीनामाघेषो हि सः ; Bri. Kathā 1,2,113—एकोनं जातरूपस्य यस्य कोटि-शतं गृहं and उपाध्यायनिरपेक्ष टीका on. Kām. i. 4 नन्दः नवनवितिकोटीश्वरः. The epithet of a powerful Croesus is नवनवितिकोटीश्वर, see Com. on Kām. xiii. II. So I read नव नवनवितिद्वयकोटीश्वरः, following the tradition. पर्यायसूनाः (पर्यायेण क्रमेण सूना वधो येषाम् । बहुश्चहिः) qualifies पश्यतः. It hardly needs pointing out that पश्यतो राक्षसस्य is अनादरार्थपूर्णी. The figure of speech in the last line is उपमा.

the stanza गृष्मैरावद्० after आस्त्वा॒हृ० with अपि च as a connective. It disturbs the logical interdependence of the speeches राजा-अन्येनैवेद्-मनुष्टितम्, चाणक्यः—अहो मरतरिन्...केनान्येनावलिसा...नन्दाः...हताः, and राजा—नन्दकुलविद्वेषिणा दैवेन. It is, therefore, omitted on the authority of T(B.). iii. 274. अधिरोहम्—to rate ; see Mallinātha on Ki. xiv. 12.

iii. 28. The latter half of the stanza शिखां मोक्षुं० contains the figure रूपक.

iii. 29. भ्रुभङ्गोद्भूतधूमम् and संजातोदग्रकम्पम् are अञ्जयीभाव compounds. Rudra is the presiding deity of the sentiment of fury (रौद्र-रस). Its permanent feeling (स्थायीभाव) is anger (क्रोध). Its outward indicatives (अनुभाव) are fiery looks, knit up eyebrows, violent movements of the limbs &c. It is attended by various accessory feelings (संचारिभाव) such as agitation (आवेग) and by natural ensuants (सात्त्विकभाव) such as eyes watering (अश्रु) and others. In course of his last angry utterance चाणक्य stamps the floor with his foot. This is compared to the forceful pace of Rudra developing his favourite sentiment in his violent dance (ताण्डव). The figure of speech is उत्पेक्षा.

iii. 30. The particle बत् denotes संतोऽ ; see Med. दूषण here means भे॒द्. It is related to दू॒ष् 10 U. in the sense of to break, for which see Mk. iii.—प्राचदिदार्नी चतुःशालकमपि दूषयामि. The figure of speech is विषम.

iii. 31. स दोऽः: When the driver applies the curb to the elephant thoughtlessly the latter breaks loose. In the same way when the minister injudiciously checks the king, the latter grows impatient of the restraint; and he is not to blame if he casts him off. Compare Kām. iv. 4. 49. The figure of speech is दृष्टान्त.

iii. 31. आर्ये फिं विचारयति, आर्ये शीघ्रं गः॒उ—To give immediate publicity to the pretened rupture, Chandragupta commands the chamberlain to go at once and cause a proclamation to be made despite the night time, to the effect that the king takes the reins of government in his own hand. iii. 31, शुक्कलह—for शुक्क in the sense of harsh compare Ms. xi. 35.—तस्मै नाकुराङ्गं शूयाच्च शुक्कं गिरमीरयेत्.

iii. 32. आर्या॒तृष्णै॒र्० Construe—प्रम भूविवरं प्रवेष्टुमित्र शुक्कः प्रवृत्ता (संजाता an inclination to enter, as it were, the bowels of the earth arises in me).

END OF ACT III
CALLED THE FEIGNED QUARREL.

Act IV.

iv. 1 गतागत is समाहारदृढ़ and अरथान (न विद्यते स्थानं यस्मिन्) is बहुवीहि. For स्थान signifying stopping, respite, see A. S. 300-301. The figure of speech is अप्रसुतप्रशस्ता. iv. 11³ अथापि शयनं न मुक्षाति—Rākṣasa appears to be in his sleeping chamber (शयन) till late in the evening. शयन n. means a sleeping room, a place of rest by day or night; see शयनोत्तम—Rām ii. 10. 11. It was cool and airy having a garden in front of it. The place to which queen धारेणी retires after the accident of the fall from the swing is accordingly named प्रवात-शयन; see M. iv. 26, 31. In palaces of kings a special officer called शयनाधिकृत has the charge of the sleeping apartments see supra ii. 16.

iv. 2. विधेय—uniformly agreeable, favourable; hence अविधेयता—absence of uniform favours, uncertainty of favours. इदम् refers to the alienation of Chandragupta from चाणक्य which he has contrived to bring about. He feels anxious about it. The speech prepares the audience for the announcement of the entrance of Karabhaka.

iv. 3. कुर्वन् बुद्ध्या विमर्शम्—The term बुद्ध्या may be construed with all the present participles. विमर्श in connection with statesmanly policy signifies सशापास्मिका बृत्ति; see the commentary on Pd. i. 20. The passage bristles with technical terms of dramaturgy. कार्य denotes the object of the play which is धर्म, अर्थ or काम; see D. R. i. 16—ज्ञाये त्रिवर्गः. It is to be distinguished from कार्य meaning fruition which is one of the five phases (अर्थप्रकृते) in which the object is successively presented to us concurrent with the five stages (अवस्था). The concordance of these phases and stages give rise to the five-fold division (संविधि) of the plot. Each division has a number of subdivisions (अङ्ग). In the initial division (मुख्य) the author lays the germs (बोज) of the object to be achieved, and in a variety of ways causes them to grow. In the pro-initial division (प्रतिमुख) the quickened germs develop. In the medial division (गम्भीर) these attain to further development tending remotely to fructification. In the dubious division (विमर्श) the mind is held in suspense regarding the result. The compleptive division (विवहण or उपसंहार) secures the object in view and winds up the plot:—

मुख्यं बीजसमुत्पत्तिर्नार्थरससंभवा ॥ D.R. i. 23.

लक्ष्यालक्ष्यं इवोऽग्रददस्तस्य प्रतिमुखं भवेत् ॥ D.R. i. 28.

फः प्रधानोपायस्य प्रागुद्दिग्दस्य किंचन ।

गर्भे यत्र समुद्रेदो हासान्वेषणवान् मुहुः ॥
 यत्र मुख्यफलोपय उद्धिक्तो गर्भतोऽधिकम् ।
 शापादैः सान्तरायश्च स विमर्शं इति स्मृतः ॥ S.D. 6.
 बीजवन्तो मुखाद्यर्था विप्रकीर्णा यथायथम् ।
 ऐकार्थ्यमुपनीयन्ते यत्र निर्वहणं हि तत् ॥ D.R. i. 44.

Of these the initial division is indicated in the stanza by the subdivision उपक्षेप, which is defined as बीजन्यास उपक्षेपः. The pro-initial division is shadowed forth by a covert reference to the subdivision परिसर्प, the definition of which is दृष्टनानुपरणं परिसर्पश्च कथ्यते. The medial division is distinctly named in the stanza and its subdivision आक्षेप which is defined as गर्भबीजसमुद्रेदाक्षेपः परिकीर्तितः is alluded to. The other two divisions are also specified there. The stanza is quoted in Kā. to illustrate नाट्यनैयुण्य. The figure speech is उपमा. iv. 31-4. Rākshasa meant to say, ‘To चाणक्य may discomfiture come !’ The door-keeper, entering, wanted to make the customary salutation, ‘May victory come to the minister !’ But the double interruption in their speeches gives a different turn to them. It apparently makes the doorkeeper say, ‘To ‘Chanakya may victory come ’ and further add ‘May discomfiture come to the minister’. Rākshasa is taken aback at the ominous turn and is filled with dismay; and he asks the doorkeeper what he means to say. The passage forms a sort of premonition (पताकास्थानक) presaging the discomfiture of Rākshasa and the victory of Chāṇakya. The MSS. read दुरात्मा चाणक्यबटुः in. iv. 31-5. But as दुरात्मन् and बटु are abusive terms ill-suited to the new turn of expression given to it, I drop them. vi. 31⁸ कस्मिन् प्रयोजने मयां प्रहितः—Note the effort that Rākshasa has to make to recollect the errand. iv. 32⁰ वेन्नपाणिः पुरुषः—The policeman is a Māgadhi-speaking character. iv. 321-4⁹. The stanza दूरेण states why people are ordered to clear the way. It thus forms a part of the reply to the question of the people regarding the cause of उत्सारणा. It should accordingly be included in it, and not go before it. I would therefore read the speech as under:—पुरुषः । ओशालध अर्या ओशालध । आकाशे । अर्या किं भणध । किंगिभित्तं ओशालणा कलीभदि ति । अर्या एषो खु कुमाले मलयकेवू शमुपण्ण-शिशावेअणं अमच्छक्षकश्च पेत्किंदु इदो आगाम्भदि । ता ओशालणा कलीभदि । णं पेत्कव । दूरे पचाशसी दंशनमवि दुल्हं अधज्ञेहि । कलाणकुलहराणं देआणं भूमिदेआणं ॥ ४ ॥

iv. 4 With कलाणकुलहर compare रहकुलघर K. M. ii. 2. The plural देआण is a plural of respect. In the metaphor of भूमिदेव the word देव by pre-eminence denotes Indra; compare infra iv. 11. पृथिवीतलजातव. The figure of speech is अस्तरूपः. iv. 410 ततः प्रविशति मलयकेतुः—To surprise Rākshasa by his visit Malayaketu enters by the private door.

iv. 5 जन in मातृजनस्य is used in a collective sense. Compare the use of गण and such other terms to denote plurality in modern Bengali. मातृजन and जननीजन include step-mothers. There is a fusion (संकर) of पर्याय and स्वभावोक्ति.

iv. 6. अकापुरुषानुरूपां ध्रुमयच्छता—bearing the yoke worthy of a brave man, that is, doing deeds of valour, bearing up manfully; cf. मकरध्वजेन बान्धवधुरा स्मुद्रधुरा, Māl. vii. The fruit of अकापुरुषधुरोद्धमन is आत्मान आजिनिधनेन वा रिपुवधूनयनेषु स्वजननीबाष्पसंकमणेन वा पित्रारावनम्, which goes not to the agent (कर्तुः) Malayaketu, but to his father Parvatīka. So the poet uses the परस्मै॒ इ॑ and not the आत्मने॑ प॒ इ॑ form; see P. i. 3:75,72—उमुदाद्भ्यो यमोऽग्रन्थे । स्वरितमितः क्री-भिप्राये कियाक्षे. The term पितुः does not denote ParvataKA, the father of Malayaketu, in particular, but his ancestors in general, the singular standing for the class of Pitris. ParvataKA fell not in battle, but died in the arms of the poison-maid. iv. 62 एक एवाह मित्रामि forms no part of the order of Malayaketu to the chief; see infra iv. 61—भो भो राजानः कुमारः समाजापयति, न स्वत्रहं केनविद्वनुगम्नत्य हाते. It rather gives the reason of the order dispensing with the attendance of chiefs. I, accordingly rearrange the several parts of the speech. There is a similar transposition in Mk. vi. which reads—कृष्ण रत्ति उजेत्र, पभादं संवुत्तं. This should be corrected to कृष्ण रमादं संवुत्तं, रत्ति उजेत्र. Another notable instance occurs in P. R. ii, 101 where घरनिमेरचये बान्धवे बन्धकीताम् should interchange place with दशोहरीनिकरे वैरोगे स्वैरेगीताम्. One more case to the point may be cited where the third and the fourth lines have been transposed. It is Jh. xi. 61, where I read the latter half as under:—शिखिगोरं सहस्र सहस्रेरितामिति रवैरुदेता रुदितः इत्यः.

iv. 7 सोस्सेत्र, from उत्तेत्र m. height, means high, tall. मर्यादा is the limit to which tidal waters go, tidal mark. It also means bounds of propriety, deference. There is a fusion (संकर) here of स्वभावोक्ति, अर्थात्तद्यात्, उत्तमा एते. iv. 7—Malayaketu orders the chamberlain to turn back with the state palanquin (शिखिका). That this was being brought by the bearers is clear from the leading सैनिको in the stag, direction which follows. It is a clerical error for सैनिको (accompanied by the palanquin-bearers). iv. 76 शिख-

रसेनं द्वारीकृत्य—The च्ची suffix implies that the mediation of the said intermediary was formal, the actual loadstone, that attracted them being the noble qualities of the Prince. iv. 7^१. For आभिगामिकगुण see Ar. vii, Kam iv. 69. वीरराघव ०। Mv. iv. derives आभिगामिक as under:—अभिगमाय प्रभवन्तर्ति अभिगामिकः. तथै प्रभवते संतापादैभ्यः (P. V. i. 101) हृति ठः प्रत्ययः. iv. 7 -7—Removing ugly repetitions I am disposed to read the passage as under:—यथा नामात्यराक्षसं किंतु सेनापतिं दित्त्वरसेनं द्वारीकृत्य वयं दुष्टामात्यपरिगृहीताच्छन्दगुप्तादपरक्तः दुमारमभिगामिकगुणयोगादात्रयणीयमाश्रयमहे ।. iv. 7^२ On विजिगंधु see Kām. viii 6. II and on आत्मगुण see Kām. xv. 11 31. With the speech of भागुरायण compare Ar. V. 4—लोकयात्राविद् राजानमात्मद्वयप्रकृतिसंपन्नं प्रियाहेतद्वारेणाभ्येत् ।.....अहमाश्रये सुरसौ विजये सुराभिगामिकगुणयुक्त हृति ।. iv. 7^३ एवमेतत्, किञ्चमात्यराक्षस०—भागुरायण who is, a secret agent of चाणक्य avails himself of every opportunity to shake the confidence of Malayaketu in Rākshasa and create a rupture between the two. The tactics employed are those of भेद which is thus described:—

स्नेहापरागानयनं संघर्षेत्पादनं तदा ।

संतर्जनं च भेदज्जैर्भेदस्तु त्रिवधः समृतः ॥ Kām. viii. 8.

In the present act there is स्नेहापरागानयन only. The fifth act sets forth the other two. iv. 7¹⁵ सुरुज्जनापेक्षया—out of regard for his friends चंदनदास, शाठदास, विराघवुस &c. iv. 7²⁹ तत्रोपसर्पामः—Malayaketu proposes to wait without and overhear the conversation.

iv. 8 सत्त्वभङ्ग—damping the spirit. स्वैः आलोपेषु—In conversation with their own people. iv. 8¹⁷ नन्दउलविणासदूणस्स—In the days of the Nandas public festivals were regularly held. They had ceased ever since the civil war began. People were grieved at their discontinuance, which they connected with the overthrow of the Nanda rule. iv. 8¹ -० The editions insert before बहु माणिदो the words जणिश्चपरिदोसो (T परिचओ) अभिमद्वचन्यु (T वधू) समागमो विज ससिणेहं. Of these जणिदपरिदोसो (T परिचओ) and सणिणेहं partly cover the same ground as परिदोस समुपाद्यन्तेण and बहु माणिदो do; and the florid style, indulging in the simile of अभिमद्वचन्यु (T वधू). समागमो is too grand in the mouth of the messenger; see my note on i. 18⁵-6^८. I look upon the whole portion as interpolated.

iv. 9 कौमुदी is a contraction of कौमुद्योमहोत्सव, formed by the elision of the latter member महोत्सव. See the note on केतु (i. 6) supra. चन्द्र्‌ गुप्ता signifies Chandragupta as well as the moon. कुमुदानन्द् means delighting vulgar people as also delighting night lotuses. कुमुद् in the first sense is a bahuvrihi compound (दुस्तिता मुदा येर्षा ते कुमुदाः ।). The double entendre in कुमुदानन्दे चन्द्रे implies उपमानोपमेय-भाव of Chandragupta and the moon and results in उपमा. The latter is a part of व्यतिरेक establishing the superiority of Nanda over Chandragupta. iv. 9३ परिचार्णी (Sk. परिपाठी) f. means a series. But two stanzas only can hardly be said to form a series. So I read परिचार्णी (Sk. परिपाठी) signifying a short recital.

iv. 10 सद्यःक्रीडारसम्—The term क्रीडा is equally applicable to public festivals and amusements as also to private sports and pastimes, see Kā. Su. iv. The reading लोकोत्तर is recovered from the Moro. ms. With the stanza compare Ki. ii. 47, सहते न जनोप्यधःक्रियां किमु लोकाधिकचाम राजकम्. The figure of speech is अर्थोपत्ति. iv. 10५. गुण, as once noted before, means उत्कर्ष. iv. 10 ५-७ Note the indiscriminate use of the future and the potential here. It is due to the influence of the अपशंसा which was the vernacular of the poet's time iv. 10२२ हस्तगतो मे चन्द्रगुप्तः भविष्यति—Rākshasa means that he will crush him like a fly. भागुरायण interprets his words differently. He artfully insinuates that Rākshasa now expects to become the Prime Minister of Chandragupta, as he had been that of his father. Now that he has dismissed his avowed enemy चाणक्य, he is satisfied. He does not want to depose him. I drop भविष्यति of mss. to make the portion of the speech correspond to the succeeding speech which is understood to repeat it. iv. 10२८-२९—There is much confusion in mss. here. One reads उज्जरणे ननु सौकर्यम्, and another उज्जरणे सौकर्यम् for what ought to be उज्जरणं नासौ गार्यम्. One has अवश्यं पश्यति and another अवश्यमवगच्छति, where there should be simply अवश्यति. In one there is the spurious addition of किञ्चित् and in another there is the much-to-be-deplored omission of न. The text has been restored after a careful consideration of various readings.

iv. 11 देवस्य येन—Hemachandra gives पृथिवीशक among the synonyms of राजन् ; see Abh. Ch 689. The stanza contains the fusion (संकर) of पारकर and काव्यलिङ्ग.

iv. 12 राजा च डामणोन्नु—Construe मैयैः सैरेवोत्पादमानमाज्ञाविधातं किं विषहते हति (हेतोः) कौटिल्यः पुनरपि प्रतिश्चां न करोति. The diadems were crescent-shaped; hence they are compared to the Moon. The planting of the foot on the heads of kings is indicative of their subjugation by Chandragupta. As regards the displacement of इति in the second line compare किं मा नालपतीत्यं खलु शउः कोपस्तवान्याप्रितः; Amaru. 24. Compare also Bk. iii. 15 and G. S. IV. 12. The indicative विषहते stands for the potential विषहेत्, and the present करोते stands for the perfect चकार. The कृत suffix युज् (अन) in कोपन expresses ताञ्छील्य 'nature'; see P. iii. 2.151. कुभमण्डार्थेभ्यश्च. The homicidal rites mentioned in the third line refer to इयेनेष्टि for which see Āval, ix. 7 and Rām, vi. 73.17.26. चाणक्य is said to have performed these rites to cause the death of king Nanda; see Kām. I. 4—प्रस्याभिचारवञ्चेग वज्रज्वलनतेजसः । पपातामूलतः श्रीमान् सुपर्वा नन्दपर्वतः ॥. The difficulties of the homicidal sacrifice consist in its rigid ritual and arduous performance, as also in warding off the disturbances that threaten to frustrate it. शकटदास attributes चाणक्य's forbearance to two causes, namely, the difficulties of the homicidal sacrifice and the uncertainty of the future. It should be borne in mind that the speech is meant to set at rest the doubts of Rākshasa. शकटदास does not want to justify the indignation of Chandragupta; for that is not relevant here. Why चाणक्य did not take a fresh vow is the question at issue; and that is answered by शकटदास. Accordingly the four lines together form a complex, and not a compound sentence made up of two co-ordinate sentences. The last two lines of the stanza form the principal, and the first two the subordinate sentence. The two are joined by the causal conjunctive इति. iv. 123—With my eye on iv. 121 गच्छ विश्रामय करभङ्गम्। and on iv. 124 अहमेवार्थं द्रष्टुमागतः; I am tempted to read अहमपि कुमारं द्रष्टु गच्छामि hero. iv. 121-12 कियन्ते कालम्—for a little while; see Bh. I. 78, परगुणपरमाणुं पर्वतीकृत्य नित्यं निजहृदि विकसन्तः सन्ति सन्तः कियन्तः and गति. vi. 3, त्वद्भिसरणरभसेन वलन्ती पताति पदानि कियन्ति चलन्ती. उदासितज्यम्—see 1.14²¹ supra. iv. 121³ कालहरण n.—delay. iv. 122¹ चन्द्रगुप्तकृतीनां चाक्यदेवा एवापरागहेतवः—Here Malayaketu gives expression to the idea put into his head by भागुरायण; see supra iv. 8 अमात्यराक्षसशाणक्ये बद्धवरो न चन्द्रगुप्ते etc. iv. 123³ एताद्वे प्रधानतमम्—see Ar. viii, Quotation from भारद्वाज, व्यसनयोरभात्यव्यसनं गरीय इति । मन्त्रो मन्त्रफलावासिः कर्मानुष्ठानमायव्ययकर्म दण्डप्रणयनं मिश्राटवीकातियंथो राजरक्षणं व्यसनप्रतीकारः कुमाररक्षगमभिवेकश्च कुमाराणामायत्तमात्येषु । तेषामभावे तत्प्रभावश्चित्रपक्षस्येव राजश्वेष्टानाशो व्यसनेषु चासम्भापरोपजापः । वैगुण्ये च प्राणदातः प्राणानेतकचरत्वाद्वाज्ञ इति ।; see also Bodhi. 66-26, रक्षाति स्वामिरात्मार्थं दुर्गमेत्रबलोदयम् । आमात्यप्रकृतिस्तस्मात् प्रकृतिभ्यो गरीयसी। iv. 124⁴-85 संभावित—adequate; accepted, that is, admitted by all. With respect to remedying the evil of ministerial defection two cases are considered here. One is that of joint administration where the affairs of state are managed by the king and his minister jointly. The other is that of autocratic administration where they are managed by the king alone. In the first case as there is joint action, I substitute the conjunctive particle च for the disjunctive particle वा of MSS. after आत्मानि in the text. To mark out the second case I read वा after स्वयम् in accordance with H (M). स्वयं वा (समासज्य) is equal to स्वस्मिन् वा समाधाय. For this use of स्वयम् compare यस्य वास्ति स्वयं प्रक्षा शास्त्रं तस्य करोति किम्। यस्य चास्ति स्वयं प्रक्षा शास्त्रं तस्य करोति किम्॥.

iv. 12³⁶-38 MSS. have एतत् संभवति where एतत् points to प्रतिविधान occurring at the very end of the speech. For the sake of perspicuity I read एतत् प्रतिविधानं संभवति. The substitution of प्रतिविधाने for प्रतिविधातुम् is based on the readings of T (G) and H (N. Bc.).

iv. 13³ शत्रुमभिशेक्तुः—On the use of the accusative see P. ii. 3.69.—न लोकाभ्ययनिष्टाखलर्थतुनाम्. The suffix तृ॒ (तृ) in अभिशेक्तृ denotes साधुकारिता, see P. iii. 2.131—135—आकेस्तच्छालतद्दर्मतत्साधुकारिषु तृ॒।

iv. 14. त्वय्युक्तृष्ट०—The stanza contains five locative absolutes. The first extols the strength of Malayaketu. The second shows the feasibility of अन्तःकोप. The third refers to सांचवन्यसन in the case of Chandragupta. The fourth points to the weakness of the inexperienced Maurya king. And the last sets forth Malayaketu's मनेवसमद्. This the minister modestly belittles by adding मार्गमालक्यनःवापारयोगोद्यने.

iv. 15 उत्तुङ्गशुक्र—Mark the contrast of शोण in reality and शोण in name, of उत्तुङ्ग, and तुङ्ग, of अतिमुखर and मुखर and of उत्सादिततर and अवसीदत्तर. Mark also that in the case of elephants the attributes of height and colour are predicated not of particular parts but of the whole body, whereas in the case of the river, only the banks are high and only the trees are dark. Mark further the distinction implied in the flow of ichoral exudation indicative of the vigour of youth and the dropping of water suggestive of the decrepitude of old age. These fitting attributes go to show that each of the elephants singly is more than a match for the river-god. Their corps is sure to worst the शोण barring in vain their triumphal march. Elephants were very much prized in ancient times. With them they forded rivers, made way through forests, crossed mountains and battered the walls of fortified towns; see Kām. xv. xix. 12.1-3. Mallinātha renders गजपति by महागज, see Si. vi. 55. Compare तुरगपति, Panch. 11-7; अहेपति Nag. Imperative forms are preferred to those of the future in this stanza and its sequel, as they better accord with the impatience and impetuosity of the speaker. The figure of speech is व्यतिरेक.

iv. 16. Having spoken of the fording of the शोण the speaker here tells us of the investing of पाटलिपुत्र. The elephants spout water over their bodies to cool themselves, which coming down in small particles mingle with ichoral exudations and descends in torrents. The figure of speech is उपमा. The similarity of elephants and clouds in two particulars is expressed by the sameness of attributes गम्भीरगर्जितरव and विकीर्णसलिल, and in the third by the parallelism of मदांबुद्धिशशीकरोद्धार, and आसारवर्षोद्धार. iv. 16 इति भागुरायणेन०—The abrupt exit of Malayaketu implies his hasty determination to order the march immediately. Hence it is that Rākshasa is anxious to know the auspiciousness or otherwise of the day of starting. At the close of the fifth Act there is a similar abrupt exit of the Prince announcing his sudden determination to invest the enemy's capital forthwith. iv. 166 कथम्। क्षपणकः—The term क्षपणक denoted a Bauddha or a Jain ascetic. Of the two, the former was esteemed and respected as much for his piety as for his learning, while the latter was despised and shunned on account of his bigotry and superstition and also for his nudity and uncleanly habits which made him वीभत्सदर्शन. By क्षपणक, Rākshasa understands a Jain ascetic and shrinks from his inauspicious sight; compare Mk. vii. 101-102,—कथमनाभ्युदयिकं श्रमण-कदर्थनम्; see also Hch. 168. iv. 168. The manuscripts read अशीभत्सदर्शनम् कृत्वा (vl. कारयित्वा) प्रवेशय (एनम्). जीवासिद्धि as a Buddha ascetic, was अशीभत्सदर्शन. So कृत्वा and कारयित्वा are redundant and are on that account left out.

iv. 17 शाशाणमलिहन्ताण०—Arhat is one of the names of बुद्ध. In Bu. xiii. 61, he is called महाभिषज् curing men of the maladies of राग etc. by the panacea of right knowledge. The implied meaning of the satanza is as follows:—Abide by the rule of worthy चाणक्य who is the physician that cures persons of the malady of delusion, prescribing what is bitter only in the beginning but beneficial in the end. This is an instance of शङ्खशक्तिमूलकवस्तुध्वनि. The figure of speech is रूपक. iv. 17। शावगा—The term श्रावक denotes a lay follower of Buddhism, see D. P. 59. 75; Tr. §, 12; Māl. x, 191. In the passage before us it is a term of euphemistic address used with reference to one of opposite persuasion showing a reverent attitude towards a Brullha ascetic. Compare the use of भगत (Sk. भक्त) by Sādhus. धामशिद्ग्री—Salvation to be attained by faith (lit. religion); see v. 2 लोउत ठेहि लोप शिद्गे मगगोहि गश्चन्ति infra.

iv. 173–18. शावगा णिश्चवेदे &c.—जीवसिद्धि appoints the very day on which the events of the fourth Act take place as propitious, the precise time of starting being the evening. It was the full-moon day. This lunar day is generally regarded very auspicious; being the most perfect of the perfect (पूर्ण) tithis see Mu. Ch. i. 4.

नन्दा च भद्रा च जया च रिक्ता पूर्णेति तिथ्योऽगुभमध्यशताः ।

सितेऽसिते शतसमाधमाः स्युः सितश्चभौमार्किंगुरौ च सिद्धाः ॥

For astrological calculations the day is divided into fifteen parts called मुहूर्ते and so is the night. The evening forms the fifteenth diurnal muhūrta. It is said to be under the influence of the lunar mansion पूर्वाकालजुरी; see Mu. Ch. vi. 50. Now in accordance with the distribution of lunar mansions into four groups and the assignment of these to the four quarters of the heavens, the said शूताकालजुरी mansion is southerly. This is favourable to journeying southward. See पीयूशवारा on Mu. Ch. xi 33—

प्राप्तादिकैः कृतिकादिसप्तनक्षत्रैः पूर्वस्यां यात्रा प्रशस्ततमा । एवं दक्षिणस्यां
मध्यादि सप्तमैः । पश्चिमां गमनुराघादिसप्तमैः । उत्तरस्यां धनिष्ठादिसप्तमैः ।

The auspiciousness of the time appointed is further ascertained from the nature of the zodiacal contact. In course of a day each sign (राशि) in succession appears in the eastern horizon owing to the apparent rotatory motion of the celestial sphere. This contact of the sign and the horizon is called लग्न. The term is also applied to the time of contact. It is named after the gruhi presiding over the sign. In the present case the zodiacal contact (लग्न) is named after बुध 'Mercury'. This planet is said to preside over मिथुन 'Gemini' and कन्या 'Vergo'. Of these the latter is not possible. For in that case the Sun would be in मीन (Pisces) which should give approximately the month of Phalguna as the time of undertaking the expedition. But the feigned quarrel of the third Act took place on the full-moon day of Kārtika and shortly after that Karabhaka was sent to राक्षस with the intelligence by the bard स्त्रकलश. Supposing a fortnight to have elapsed in the expectation of the rumoured retirement of चाणक्य to a penance forest before the express was posted off, and allowing another fortnight to cover a journey of more than a hundred yojanas we come to the full-moon of मार्गशीर्ष, which may be taken as the time of the arrival of Karabhaka. The contact of मिथुन (Gemini) gives this time. The Sun then occupies the sign धनुष् (Sagittarius). This period is deemed particularly propitious for यात्रा (journey); see Mu. Ch. xi. 8. The month in which the Sun's course lies through धनुष्, is मार्गशीर्ष. This is one of the months in which kings set out on their expeditions of conquest; see Ms. vii. 18². It falls in हेमन्त (autumn). In that season evening is considered to be very auspicious; see Mu. Ch. vi. 98. At the time appointed there is another fortunate coincidence. It is the sudden rising and setting of केतु. It presages good luck; see Bri. S. xi. 8. To sum up, the concurrence of the sign धनुष्, the month मार्गशीर्ष, the time गोधूलि and the auspicious augury of अचिरास्थितकेरु establish and enhance the merit of मिथुनलम्प.

The next point considered is the aspect of the Moon. This luminary is said to be easterly when it is in मेष, सिंह and धनुष्, southerly when in वृषभ, कन्या and मकर, westerly when in तुला, कुम्भ and मिथुन, and northerly when in कर्त्तव्य, वृश्चिक and मणि. In the present case the Moon rises in the contact of Gemini (मिथुनलम्प). It is, therefore, westerly. Now a person travelling from north to south has the westerly Moon to the right of him. This is believed to confer happiness; for it is said, संमुखोर्ध्यत्वं लाभाय दक्षिणः सुखसंपदे । पृष्ठगः प्राणनाशाय वासे चन्द्रं धनक्षयः ॥

The speech under notice forms a sort of premonition (पताकास्थानक). In this light it is to be interpreted as under—' Reverent Sir ! I have it. The full-moon day is auspicious in all respects from noon downwards. Also the Kshatriya agent of चाणक्य, namely, भागुरायण, opposes your going from the north, the land of the living, to the south, the land of the deed. Moreover, O valiant man, who are nearing your fall, there will be your union with wise चाणक्य on your going to पाटलिषुत्र, when Malayaketu who has a sudden rise will have a sudden fall and King Chandragupta, perfect in all the members of the body politic will be supreme'. By auspiciousness is implied the elevation of राज्यस to the premiership of Chandragupta. There is an allusion here to the express order of चाणक्य to भागुरायण to save the life of राज्यस under any circumstance; and he does save him from the untimely end which overtakes his friends, the five Mlechchha Kings in the fifth Act. The author also foreshadows the triumph of Chandragupta and the capture of Malayaketu announced in the sixth Act. There is, besides, a reference to the future meeting of राक्षस and चाणक्य as described in the seventh Act. शावगा is the मागधी vocative singular; see Pr. P. xi. 13. For दक्षिण in the sense of अनुकूल see Jagaddhara on Mal. i. 69; see also Vai. With the equivocation involved in जन्मकत्ते compare Vas.—स त्रिशंकुरिच नक्षत्रपथस्त्वालितः, and P. R. i—अये एतादति वीरमण्डले भवते नव नक्षत्रविद्याकुशलः. For शूर in the senses of a brave man and the Sun see A. S. 470, and compare Vas.—केन्द्रित कुमुदाकरा हवासोऽशूरभासः. The words नक्षत्र, क्षत्र and लम्ब belong to the neuter gender in संस्कृत. But they are here used in the masculine according to the rule लिङ्गमतन्मतम्.

A good many manuscripts read णिवृत्तशत्तमकलणा which means 'After the seventh करण is over.' A करण is the half of a lunar day. There are eleven करण; of these the seventh is भद्रा or विष्टि. It is regarded inauspicious. The first half of a full-moon day is taken up by this करण. After the करण is over the other half of the full-moon day is auspicious. See Mu. n. 765, पूर्वभागं परित्यज्य पूर्णिमा गमने वरा. This reading suits the astrological considerations. But it does not square with the premonitory interpretation. So it is rejected. iv. 18 अस्ताहिमुहे शूले, as applied to Rākshasa, is vocative plural of respect. The participial noun लम्ब signifies संयोग in the premonitory interpretation; see P. iii. 3. 114—नुंसके भावेकः । iv. 18^१ तिथिरेव तावन्न शुद्ध्यति—The full-moon day, though generally auspicious, is considered inauspicious for a journey (यात्रा); see Mu. Ch. xi. 9.

iv. 19 चन्दे उणो शतगुणे—In the stanza that follows stress is laid on चन्द्रबल. In Ath. Jy. too, we read तिथिरेकगुणा प्रोक्ता नक्षत्रं च चतुर्गुणम् । वारशास्त्रगुणः प्रोक्तः करणं षोडशान्वितम् । द्वात्रिशतकगुणो योगस्तारा षष्ठिसमन्विता । चन्द्रः शतगुणः प्रोक्तस्तस्माच्चन्द्रबलं बलम् । This passage gives prime importance to चन्द्रबल, while it is apparently silent regarding the importance of राशिलम्ब. Guided by them I reject चउशास्त्रिगुणे लग्ने which is the reading of the MSS. To make the verse a perfect आर्या I add येव in the first line after चउगुणे.

iv. 20 लग्ने होदि शुलग्नो—The premonition (पताकास्थानक) is here resumed. It is as under:—'The union is a happy union. here being the friendly attitude (lit. mentality). Give up the unhappy union with Malayaketu. Going there, you will be vastly benefited with Chandragupta in your favour'. सौम्य—(1) Budha or Mercury, (2) Good, friendly. ग्रह—(1) planet; (2) resolve, mentality. iv. 19² शांवादेदु शाचगो । हगे उण गमिश्हां—The proposal of Rākshasa to consult other astrologers is resented by जीवसिद्धि who goes away apparently in a dudgeon. Māgadhi हगे and Mahāristri अहर्त्र or अहर्य are related to Sanskrit अहम् with an additional क before the final consonant. Compare असकौ, यकः &c., in संस्कृत and ego in Latin. iv. 204 कुविदे.....भजवं कदन्ते०—Jīva siddhi apparently means that he believes Rākshasa's good fortune is leaving him, since he puts greater faith in the statement of strangers than in that of his friend. The speech further implies that Rākshasa is courting his own ruin by siding with Malayaketu who was hostile to Chandragupta, leaving the latter who was the only surviving son of his late sovereign Nanda. कुतान्त means दैव, for which see Vai. From it is derived कार्तन्तिक meaning a fortune-teller, an astrologer. पक्ष means a proposition, statement as well as a side. iv. 20¹¹ अत्थाहिलासी सूरो—There is लेप in सूरो which signifies the Sun as well as a brave man, as noted in iv. 18, notes. As the adjective भजवं does not square with the implication, it is dropped; see I 5⁹, notes. उवरज्जदि किल चन्दो ति iv. 20¹¹ अत्थाहिलासी—compare Hch. 176.—अस्तमभिलाषिणि सवितरि and Hch. 187.—तारकराजम्...अस्तमभिलयन्तम्.

iv. 21 आविर्भूतानुरागाः०—The flush of morning twilight suffused all over the trees is metaphorically spoken of as the glow of love; and their shadows moving in the direction of the Sun and getting close to him as the latter rises high in the east are compared to persons flocking to one in prosperity and trying to be always near him. The shadows in the evening turn away from the setting Sun. The trees are, therefore, said to forsake him. For अनुराग in the double sense of relish and love see K 153, 1. 2 and Si. xi. 66. The word पलद्वाय n. a tatpurusha, from पत्र and द्वाय, denotes आवाहुल्य on account of the thick foliage of trees. अद्वरम्—close, near. प्रायो भूरपस्यजन्ति०—The prophetic statement is verified in the case of Malayaketu. See Act vi. 32¹ infru. The mythical mountains of sunrise and sunset are the clouds (Vedic पर्वत) on the eastern and western horizon where the Sun rises and sets. The figure of speech is अथन्तरन्यास.

END OF ACT IV
called
The Bait.

ACT V.

v. पेटिका, प्रसेविका and स्थगिका are synonyms meaning a box, a casket. In Hch. 256, we come across पाथेयथगिका. In Abh. Ch. 718, we read स्थगी ताम्बूलकरङ्गः. In D. N. v. 29, it appears as थविआ which makes us suspect that the word is imported from प्राकृत.

v. 1 बुद्धिजल—To the circumscribed vision of Siddhārthaka the objective of the policy of चाणक्य seems to be the incrimination and eviction of Rākshasa, which he was commissioned to bring about. That he sees nigh, naturally with a feeling of exultation. The real objective, however, that चाणक्य has in view, is to induce Rākshasa to accept the premiership of Chandragupta and thereby to make the latter secure on the throne. देशालविभाग or देशकाल is one of the five constituent elements (अङ्ग) of successful statesmanship (मन्त्र). With जङ्गिज्ञार for णिझरजल compire चन्द्रस्थिरणो for सिरिचन्द्रस्स i. 1817 supra. The inversion is warranted by the rule प्राकृते लिङ्गवचनमतन्त्रं पूर्वेनपातानियमश्च. The figure of speech is सावयवरूपक. v. 13. किल expresses a feigned action (अन्तर्क); compire Jh. iii 50; ki. viii 48. He pretends to go to पाटलिषुत्र only to be arrested by the guards. v. 14 जाव से आत्रमगं पडिवाऽमि—The ill-omened sight of a क्षणक is welcome to Siddhārthaka for he wants to be balked in his pretended mission by Malayaketu's van-guards. Hence he bides his coming.

v. 2 The reference to the ideal of arhatship points to जीव सिद्धि being a Hinayānist. In the Bodhisattvayāna or Buddhayāna, i. e. Mahāyāna, men attain to Buddhahood through the intervening stage of a Bodhisattva, In Arhadyāna or Srāvakayāna, i. e. Hinayāna they aspire to arhatship, that is, Buddhahood without the intermediate step. अलिहन्ताणं पणमामो० Here मग्ग (sk. मार्ग) means the four paths of the followers of Buddha. They are स्रोतःप्राप्ति (entering the stream of the Buddhist laity), सङ्कटागामी (the path of those who have to return once to this world), अनागामी (the path of those who no more return to this world) and आहैत (the path of arhats); see M. P. S. ii. 1-10. The निवौण to be reached by these paths, is not, like the heaven of Hinduism, reached after death beyond this terrestrial sphere, but is attained before death in this world (लोप). The Buddhist paths are for that reason said to be of superlative excellence (लोउक्त). Hemachandra treats सिद्धि and निर्वाण as synonyms; see Abh. Ch. 74-75 The stanza under comment conveys a hidden meaning (शशस्त्रमूलक वस्तुव्यवनि). The friend of चाणक्य therein praises his worthy associate of studies for the profundity of his intellect by which he secures the accomplishment of his object with his extraordinary way of working in this world. v. 22-3 I read अस्ताणगमणे here according with अद्वाणगमण. of iv. 1. It is recovered from the double reading अद्वाणगमणशमुहत्तरलणे of H. (P.). The loss of गमण thereof has given the variants अद्वाणशमुहत्तरलणे, अद्वाणशमुहत्तरलणे and अद्वाणशमुहत्तरलणे. The substitution of शमुव्यहण for गमण in the original reading has given rise to अथाणशमुव्यहणे, अद्वाणशमुव्यहणे and पथाणशमुव्यहणे. v. 26 The reading adopted in the text is found in H. (B). From this simple original have sprung कष्टदेशनिवेशिदे, कण्ठधालिदे, कण्ठधाले, मगगोगकण्ठधाले, मगगादेशकुण्ठधाले, करगदे and many other corruptions found in Mss. v. 27 लेहे अ शूपुदि—The particle अ (Sk. च) expresses अवधारण here. It is the same as Gujarati અ v. 212. सुपुड़ मुण्डाविअ—Compare Nīti V. प्रकीर्णकसमुहेश, कार्यमारम्यालोचनं शिरोमुण्डनमनु नक्षत्रप्रश्न इव; compare also S. K. 1 काराविज्ञ खडरं गामउडो मजिजओ जिमिओ । पक्षत्वे तिहिवारे जोहसिंहं पुळिउं चलिओ ॥. The following stanza names the lunar mansions inauspicious for shaving;—रोहिण्यां च विशाखायां मैत्रे (i. e. अनुगाधायां) चैतोत्तरासु च । मध्यायां कृतिज्ञायां च द्विजैः क्षौरं विवर्जितम् ॥. The maxim here referred to is मणिडत्तदिरोनक्षत्रान्वेषणन्याय. v. 21 ण शपद...अणुऊले ग गश्चीअदि—He means to say that it is not the astrological merit of the day but the passport of भागुरायण that helps a person in his journey. Note that दिन is both masculine and neuter. v. 222. मिगमःवेदा आशि—Originally singular, आसि (Māg. आशि) stands for आस्ति, as well as आसन्; see Hai. v. viii 3.164. v. 224 भाउलाअगश्च मुहाइ लाङ्छिदं शि—The passport was in the form of a stamp on the cloth worn by a person with a seal dipped in ink made of red chalk or any other dye stuff. see P. C. viii. 34—नवेद्यालोहिनिन्दुविद्यविदित्युते पार्वणमव्याप्तान्त । सायाहमुद्विधिक्षुरेन धातुदवेण संन्यस्तमिवैकचिद्वृद्धम् ॥. The practice of stamping the cloth worn by a person helps us to say with a degree of certainty that जीवासिद्वि was not nude, and consequently he was not नग्नशणक but रक्तरट. v. 225 गुल्म meaning guards, includes van-guards, rear-guards, and pickets of soldiers stationed at different points round the camp with signals or passwords; see Ms. vii. 190. and Kām. xvi. 6. The officer of the guards (गुल्मा-विकारिन् गौलिमक or गुल्मय) is thus described in शु नीति. 2.—

 योऽयः स पत्तिपालः स्वात् त्रिशतां गौलेमकः सूतः ॥
 परिवृत्तिं यामिकानां करोति स च पत्तिपः ।
 स्ववधानं यामिकानं विजानीयात् गुणमपः ॥

It is derived from गुड 6. p. to defend. v. 238 भण मे कञ्जसिद्धी होतु स्ति—Say, my mission will prosper; bless my undertaking. v. 243 प्रवेशकः—It is thus defined, यन्नाचैः केवलं पात्रैभीविभूतार्थसूचनम् । अङ्गयो-हभयोर्मध्ये स विशेषः प्रवेशकः ॥. An interlude (प्रवेशक) differs from a prelude (विवरभक) in one respect only. Its characters are all प्राकृत-भासिन्; and for the matter of that it never begins a play, such is the partiality of purist for संकृत.

v. 3 गुदुर्लक्ष्योदेता—The general statement is made in admiration of the policy of चाणक्य. There is a fusion (संकर) of उपमा and अर्थान्तर-न्यास. v. 32 आस्थानमण्डप—The pavilion of public audience. मण्डप here stands for पटमण्डप (a tent).

v. 4. कुले लज्जयां च०—The root विक्षी requires the locative of of the customer. The present indicative विमृशति has the sense of the imperative. The stanza contains the figure अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा.

v. 5. नन्दान्वयालम्बिना—Related to the Nanda family, a scion of the Nanda family. On चाणक्यनिराकृतः (निराकृतः चाणक्यः येन; Bahuvrihi) see P. ii, 2.37—वाहिताग्न्यादिषु. In स्थैर्यं भक्तिगुणस्य it is the continuity of devotion to Rākshasa from father to son that is referred to. King Parvataka put entire faith in Rākshasa, and was firmly attached to him ever since his secret alliance with him. After his death, Malayaketu continued to profess the same attachment to him. The stanza contains the figure उत्प्रक्षा. v. 5० जयने पिदधामि—This act of Malayaketu is indicative of close intimacy; see Amaru. 19, Chand. K. i. 13, v. iii. 1 and Si. ix. 96. It is a sport in which one comes from behind unobserved and covers the eyes of another with his or her hands. The latter in recognition tells the name of the person pressing the eyes, who thereupon takes off the hands; see. V. S. 2-3. It is allied to अहुरुलिताडितक and सुनिर्मलितक of Kā. Sū 18. v. 51४ अये राक्षपस्य मिलं जीविसाद्यः— See Kām. 13.38 - एते झेयात्तु संचाराः सर्वे नान्योन्यवेदिनः v. 51५ गमिस्तं The attrition of the termination मि to a mere m sound in the present future was the precursor of a similar change that took place in the fullness of time in the present. It is noticed casually in a note by Hemachandra; see Hai. v. viii. 3. 141. This resulted in the termination

v. 6 सुहन्मुखादिपुमध्यक्षय—Here रिषु refers to Rākshasa and सुहन्मुख to जीविसिद्धि who feigned friendship with Rākshasa. v. 6¹ हन्तु छतार्थोऽस्मि—By अर्थ (lit. object) is meant the fathering of the guilt of having murdered Parvata on Rākshasa, which he was commissioned to do by चाणक्य; see i. 191⁹ and i. 192⁰ supra.

V. 7. मित्रं ममायमेति०—The adverbial form अन्वर्थतः means the same as अन्वर्थम्; compare यथार्थतः and यथार्थम्. There is a fusion (संकर) of सहोक्ति and काड्यलिङ्ग in the stanza. v. 7⁶ तस्मिन् काले सर्वर्थ-सिद्धिं राजानमिच्छतो.....पर्वतेश्वर एवार्थपारपन्थी०—The passage informs the reader that Sarvārthaśiddhi was alive when पर्वतेश्वर was murdered. परिगन्थी (परि विरुद्धं पन्थयितुं शालमस्य, P. iii. 2 78)—antagonistic, cf. परिगन्थ. The readings नास्ति दोष एवाक्षेति (T) and न दोषमिवाश्र (H) overshoot the mark by absolving Rākshasa emphatically and entirely from the guilt.

V. 8 मित्राणि शत्रुवामिदा०—The particle इव denotes कृतकर्त्व here. Concerning political friendship and enmity see Kām. viii. 73—अमित्राण्यपि कुर्वीत मित्राण्युपचयावहान् । आहिते वर्तमानानि मित्राण्यपि परित्यजेत् ॥ There is a fusion (संकर) of काव्यलिङ्ग, पर्याय, and अर्थान्तरन्यास. v. 8³ अमात्यवधे प्रकृतिक्षोभः स्थात्. The member of the body politic here alluded to is बल. On the advice given by Bhāgurāyaṇa see Kām. viii 69. v. 8 सलेहो चुरिसो गहीदो—The captain of the guards failed to notice the casket of jewellery concealed by Sidhārthaka under the armpit So it is not reported here.

V. 9. आणत्तीअ गुणेसु०—The speaker praises blind fidelity, to defend his own action of perfidy to Rākshasa. अग्नारिसज्जणोए—Devotion to the master is here described as the fostering parent of servants. The reading of the majority is आणन्तीए of which the Sanskrit rendering given by them is आनयन्त्यै. But the प्राकृत equivalent of आनयन्त्यै is आणेन्तीए not आणन्तीए. Even if we look upon आणन्तीए to be a clerical error, the root आनी which takes two objects is here wanting in either. I regard आणन्तीए to be a blunder for आणत्तीए or आणत्तीअ. The same blunder is to be noticed in Se. B. vi. 19. But the commentator is careful enough to render it by आज्ञासि. As a converse case I point to Se B. iii 48, दूषिए राहवहिअए भमरोअत्तभस्मि कुसुमस्मिव पवाअए भमरोअत्तभस्मि—which I propose to read दूषे राहवहिअअए भमरोअत्तभस्मि = सुमस्मि व पवाअए भमरोअत्तभस्मि (दूषे राधवहृदयके भ्रमाद् रुदति कुसुम इव प्रम्लाने अपयद्भ्रमरे)—Here त्त has taken the place of न्त. The variant तिष्पन्तीए गुणेसु० also stands in need of correction. The प्राकृत substitute of तृप्ति is थिष्प, see Hai. v. viii. 4. 137. So we have to read थिष्पन्तीअ गुणेसु० which would mean ‘ content to look at merits (only). ’ The figure of speech is रूपक. v 95. परिग्रह m.—a domestic servant; see Med. पारिग्रहः परिजने. v. 9। उद्देष्य दर्शय—The action of unrolling is generally predicated of a scroll or letter; see M. v. 119.—लेखं च नाट्येनाद्वैष्यति. There is a special term काचनक to denote the string tied round a letter; see Hā. 54. I have, therefore preferred उद्देष्य to उद्वाष्ट्य. v. 9७ स्वरित-यथास्थान etc.—All letters began with the auspicious word स्वरित. Secret correspondence was purposely vague. The carrier, who was generally a trusted person, supplied the oral clue (वाचिक). See Hā. 54. वर्णतूतः स्वस्तिसुखो लेखो वाचिकहारकः and Ha 167.-संदेशोक्तस्तु वाचिकम् A letter to a high personage was accompanied by presents; see M. v. 118-119 These presents were called अशून्यार्थः; see Hch. 241 अरमस्त्वाभिना संदेशमशून्यता० नयता०. On the insidious fabrication of आणक्य meant to incriminate Rākshasa, see Kām. 9. 6⁹—अर्थोत्सर्गेण महता लर्जैश्चायर्थसंहस्रैः।

प्रधानमुत्तरस्येह प्रकुर्वीतार्थदूषणम् ॥ v. 919 प्रथममुपन्यस्तसंधीनाम्—The term उपन्यस्त is suggestive of the alliance being उपन्याससंधि. It is thus defined:—भव्यामेकार्थसंसिद्धिं समुद्दिश्य क्रियेत यः । स उपन्यासकुशलैरुपन्यास उदा हृतः ॥ See Kām. i ix. 8. The alliance of Chandragupta and the Mlechchha kings is here styled उपन्याससंधि (Stipulation alliance) from the latter's point of view. They are said to be stipulating for the territory, treasure and elephants of Malayaketu in consideration of their undertaking to kill him. On the part of Chandragupta, however, the alliance was, what they call, उपहारसंधि, (bestowal alliance) in as much as the latter ostensibly promised to give away the territory, treasure and elephants of the enemy to the allied Mlechchha kings; see Kām. ix. 5—संप्रदानात् भवति य उपहारः स उच्यते; and Man. ii 11. 8, गजानश्चांस्तथा रत्नं सुवर्णं सूमिमेव च । दत्त्वा यः क्रियते संधिरूपहारः स उच्यते ॥ On account of the bestowal (उपहार) Chandragupta is spoken of as उपहारिन् (bestower) in the letter. The traditional reading उपकारिणम् yields no sense. For, we have here before us not a case of उपकार (obligation), but of उपहार (bestowal). v. 920 पूर्वप्रतिज्ञातसंधिपरिषण-प्रतिपादनेन—by the granting प्रतिपादन of the stipulated (प्रतिज्ञात) reward of alliance (संधिपरिषण). v. 920 सत्यसंघः (सत्या संघा यस्य)—whose promise is true i. e., true to his promise. v. 921 एवमुपगृहीताः सन्तः—Who have been so much (एवम्) won over (उपगृहीताः). v. 921 उपहारिणम्—The maker of the bestowal alliance (उपहारसंधि), i. e. the pledger. v. 923 कोशाहस्तिकाभ्याम्—For हास्तिक n. (a collection of elephants) see Ak. The manuscripts read कोशाहस्तिभ्याम्, which is a clerical error similar to कृतकृयताम् of I, 15. v. 923 अलकारत्रयं च श्रीमता यत् प्रेषितम्—These are understood by Malayaketu as fee in advance from Chandragupta to Rākshasa for murdering him. v. 924 अशून्यार्थं m. n.—A ceremonial present accompanying a letter or a message to a high personage, especially a king; compare P. Pr. 31-32, विजयार्थ n. v. 925 वाचिक n.—An oral clue to a vague communication. The root निराकृ means (i) to expel, (ii) to annihilate. The manuscripts read either आसृतमात् सिद्धार्थकात् or आसृतमादस्मात्. Both are defective. The first is wanting in the identification of the carrier with Siddhārthaka; and the second omits the name of the carrier. In the absence of the mention of the said identification दक्षटदास would not have written the letter. Had the name of the carrier been not given in the letter भागुरायण could not have called him by his name in the next speech; for he does not know him. I, therefore, read आसृतमादस्मात् सिद्धार्थकात्. Viewed as an ordinary epistle of common life, the letter under notice purports to be addressed to a high personage. He has an enemy possessing much money, vast landed property and many elephants. The addressee and his enemy are presumably cousins, among whom inveterate family feuds are very common. Their consanguinity is inferable from the fact that the former has the power to give away the belongings of the latter, which he could do only if he be a presumptive heir to him. The addressee has obliged the correspondent by destroying his enemy. He sends valuable pieces of jewellery by way of present to him. In return the correspondent undertakes to do away with his cousin with the help of certain friends of his who are in the service of the wealthy proprietor. Lured by the promise of the vast property they join him in the conspiracy. v. 9.6 कीदशो लेखः—Whose letter is this, that is, by whom is this letter written ? v. 9 २८.३४ When questioned whose letter it was that he carried, Siddhārthaka stammers out अज्ज ए जाणामि which, coming after कथ्यार्थं लेखः—seems to imply that he does not know whose letter it was. When further questioned about the person who was to have the oral clue from him, he stammers out तुम्हेहि, as if he meant that Malayaketu and Bhāgurāyana were to receive it. Struck at what appeared a queer reply, Bhāgurāyana puts the question again to him. Thereupon Siddhārthaka makes his meaning clear by repeating in full that he was dumbfounded with fear on his being arrested, in consequence of which he did not know what to say. He simulates that he is on one hand reluctant to disclose the secret of his master Rakshasa as it would be an act of treachery, and is on the other hand, afraid of withholding the truth from Prince Malayaketu as it would be an act of treason. v. 9.५ अये तदिदमाभरणं—The indeclinable अये expresses स्मरण (recognition); see Med. v. 97। मामभिद्वान्ति—The roots कु॒ध् and दु॒ह् when preceded by prepositions, take the accusative of the object of anger and of malice; see P. i. 4. 38—कु॒ध्रु॒होरू॒पसृष्ट्योः कर्म्. v. 97। आपूर्णेस्मद्भलं—The prefix आ here has diminutive force; compare आपाष्टु, आलक्ष्य, आनलि etc. The adjective आपूर्णि so derived should be distinguished from the past passive participle आपूर्णि. Note also that बल n. means an army, and that बल m. means a strong man, a warrior; see A. S. 505—506. The warriors of Chandragupta are भद्रभट and his companions.

v. 10. सारथे निश्चितः—With reference to the army निश्चित means resolved, resolute; hence strong, efficient. अन्वय m. signifies following; see Bh. v. 66—का त्वमेकाकिनी भारु निरन्वयजने वते. By it is meant the co-operation of allied forces such as मित्रबल, भ्रेणिबल, आटाविकबल &c. साधन stands for मौलबल. उभयोः denotes friends (सपक्ष) and foes (विपक्ष). पक्ष means the cause, and स्वपक्ष the cause of the leader (स्वामिन्) साध्य n. signifies the object to be achieved and साध्य adj. means 'of which the loyalty or efficiency stands in need of proof', that is to say, 'of doubtful efficiency.' To understand clearly the stanza as applied to a syllogism it is necessary to know something of Indian Logic. अनुमान (Inference) is of two kinds, स्वाध्यानुमान and पराध्यानुमान. We are here concerned with the former. Of this threemembered syllogism साध्य, साधन and पक्ष correspond to the major, middle and minor terms of Western Logic. The middle term साधन is generally known as हेतु or लक्ष. This हेतु is called केवलान्वयित्, केवलव्यतिरेकिन् or अन्वयव्यतिरेकिन् according as it is capable of being joined with the major term (साध्य) in an affirmative universal proposition only, with its converse only, or with both. The proposition which lays down affirmatively the constant and invariable concomitance of the middle term (हेतु) with the major (साध्य) is known as अन्वयव्याप्ति; e. g. whatever is smoky is fiery, as is the kitchen. The converse of this is व्यतिरेकव्याप्ति; e. g. whatever is not fiery is not smoky, as is the tank. In these instances the major term (साध्य) 'fiery' is ascertained inductively to be always capable of being predicated of the kitchen and incapable of being so, of the tank. Since kitchen is an instance on the side of the minor term (पक्ष), and the tank, on the opposite side, they are respectively called सपक्ष and विपक्ष. Now of the three varieties mentioned above the अन्वयव्यतिरेकिन् hetu alone makes an argument perfectly sound and irrefutable. A thoroughly sound अन्वयव्यतिरेकिन् hetu satisfies five tests or conditions. (i) It must be predicateable of the minor term (पक्ष); (ii) it must be present in सपक्ष; (iii) it must be absent from विपक्ष; (iv) it must not be disproved by other modes of proof; (v) it must not be impugned by a counter hetu. These are respectively called (1) पक्षधर्मत्वम्, (2) सपक्षे सत्यम्, (3) विपक्षाद्वयाद्वृत्तत्वम्, (4) अवाधितविषयत्वम् and (5) असत्यतिपक्षत्वम्. Thus in the ordinary instance 'This mountain is fiery because it is smoky &c.' the hetu 'smoky' is predicateable of the minor term (पक्ष) 'mountain,' is known to be present in the sapaksha 'kitchen,' is absent from the Vipaksha 'tank,' is not disproved by the प्रत्यक्ष, उपमान or शाब्द mode of proof, and is not impugned by a counter hetu. When the अन्वयव्यतिरेकिन् hetu does not stand these tests, it leads to fallacies (हृत्वाभास). They are five in number, (1) अवैकारिक (2)

विरुद्ध (3) सत्त्वातिपक्ष (4) असिद्ध and (5) बाधित. The first is threefold, साधारण, भसाधारण, and अनुपसंहारिन्. Of these three the साधारण and असाधारण varieties violate the third and the second condition respectively, and the अनुपसंहारिन् variety is void of both. The second fallacy violates the same two conditions and the other three respectively infringe the fifth, the first and the fourth conditions. The stanza under notice deals with अन्वयव्यतिरेकिन् hetu. The characteristics of a sound hetu are briefly indicated in the first two lines. The first clause साये निश्चितम् satisfies the tests of अबाधितविषयत्वम् and असत्तिपक्षत्वम्. The second clause अन्वयेन घटितम् fulfils the condition of सपक्षे सत्त्वम्. The third clause स्वपक्षे स्थिरत्वे विभ्रत् conforms to the test of पक्षधर्मत्वम्. And the fourth clause observes the condition of विपक्षाद्वयावृत्तत्वम्. The third line of the stanza, with sententious brevity, refers to the fallacies arising out of an unsound hetu. Thus the clause इवयमेव साध्यम् hints at the fallacies सत्त्वातिपक्ष and बाधित; the clause उभयोस्तुल्यम् alludes to अनैकान्तिक and विरुद्ध; and the clause पक्षे विरुद्धम् points to असिद्ध. The words साध्ये निश्चितम् signify साध्ये निश्चितसत्त्वाकम् i.e. प्रमाणान्तरेण हेत्वन्तरेण च आविप्रतिषेद्धम्. The words अन्वयेन घटितम् imply सपक्षे सत्त्वम्; for अन्वयव्याप्ति is impossible without सपक्ष. The pronoun स्व in स्वपक्षे stands for वादिन्. The word साध्यम् in the third line means साध्यसत्त्वाकम् i.e. अनिश्चितसत्त्वाकम् which amounts to saying प्रमाणान्तरेण हेत्वन्तरेण वा विप्रतिषेद्धम्. Similarly, उभयोस्तुल्यम् should be taken to mean साधारणत्वेन असाधारणत्वेन अनुपसंहारित्वेन विरुद्धत्वेन च सपक्षविपक्षयोः तुलयूपम्; and पक्षे विरुद्धम् should be understood as signifying पक्षे असिद्धम्. The term निग्रह in the fourth line alludes to हेत्वाभास being one of the twenty-two निग्रहस्थानानि given in Nyā. Su v. 2. The stanza under notice contains the union (संस्कृति) of the figures श्लेष and उपमा. The variant सपक्षे is rejected; because सपक्ष has been already referred to in अन्वयेन घटितम्. If we read सपक्षे instead of स्वपक्षे in the first line, there is nothing in the hemistich answering to पक्षे विरुद्धम् of the third line. V. 10⁴ परिकल्पितविभागी:-in allotted divisions, that is to say in the proposed order.

V. 11 प्रस्थानव्यं पुरस्तात्—The खस were the hill-tribes of Khasia in the north eastern part of Bengal. The शबर were the dwellers of the Vindhya forest. These two classes of soldiers formed the army of woodmen आटविक्कल under their respective chiefs. The Gandharas were the people of the province to the west of the Indus about Kandahar. The हूण were the white हूण who were established in the Panjab and along the Indus. Cosmas Indicopleustes who travelled in the Red Sea about 525 A. D., speaks of the Huns as a powerful nation in northern India in his days. The order is issued to the chiefs following Prince Malayaketu. I therefore adopt the reading चैव: from H. M. in the first line, substituting at the same time शबर् for मगध in accordance with H. (C. H. K.) Moreover, since चैद् a derivative of चेदि is not met with, I read, चैव हूणः in the third line. Thus we have the pairs of Khasa and Sabara chiefs, Gāndhāra and Yavana chiefs, and शक and हूण chiefs. The remaining five chiefs form a group by themselves. v. 11³ अधिकारपदं शङ्कास्थानम्—This reflection of Rākshasa arises out of the necessity of adorning his person in a befitting manner. If he did not do so, he would offend Malayaketu by the appearance of मँ ping melancholy for his former master King Nanda. His action might be interpreted even in the light of disrespect, or worse than that, of disaffection.

v. 12 भयं तावत् सेव्याऽ—For प्रत्यासन्न in the sense of a personal attendant of a king, see Supra i. 14¹⁴. The singular stands for the plural. मतिः सोऽश्वायानां०—It is not the appropriateness of fall from a high position that the speaker refers to here but the imminence of fall every moment. So I prefer to read अनुरेलम् rejecting अनुहूलम् and अनुरूपम् of MSS. For अनवेलम् in the sense of प्रातक्षणम् or अनुक्षणम् see Si. iii. 79 and R. iii. 5. The stanza contains अप्रभुतप्रशंसा.

v. 13 पादाण्ये दश०—The parts (अङ्ग) of the visual organ are the pupil, the eyelids, the eyelashes &c. see V. i. 16, अपाङ्गनेत्रा, where अङ्ग denotes the pupils. तद्विशेषे—its peculiarity, any thing particular about it. There is a fusion (संकर) of उपमा, उत्प्रेक्षा and रवभावोत्तिः here. v. 13⁴ प्रयाणे प्रतिवधानमनुतिष्ठता—taking measur e s (प्रतिवधान) regarding the order of march (प्रयाण), fixing the order of march. v. 13¹⁰ अस्ति काश्चेद्यः कुमुमपुरं गच्छति०—The question apparently relates to the sending of secret agents with missions and the returning of spies with intelligence. v. 13² गच्छाताः—Secret agents sent and spies returned. v. 13¹⁰ अथे सिद्धाथकः—There appear two more speechs after this in the editions, which are given in the foot-note. Their retention means an open imputation to Rākshasa by Siddhārthaka of having entrusted to him a secret message of a suspicious character. After the preferring of such a serious charge even the generous-minded Rākshasa can hardly be supposed to defend a foul calumniator like Siddhārthaka with the words ताड्यमानः पुरुषः किमिव न बूयत्. Such a defence after the admission made in मए ए पारिदं रहस्यं धारिण् is futile. So the speeches are rejected as spurious. v. 13¹⁹ स्वामिनः पुररताऽकथयिष्यति is equal to स्वामिनं त इथयिष्यति; see Si. xi. 39, वहु जगद् पुरस्तात् तस्य मत्ता किलाहम् । and compare Bh. 1-51, यं यं पश्यसि तस्य तस्य पुरतो मा ब्रह्मि दीनं वचः । V. 13⁴ कर्मिभित् परितोषथाने—Rakshasa commits a blunder in not being explicit. Its very indefiniteness gives it a suspicious look. V. 13⁴⁷ अर्हं...

.....तादधितुं—This construction is grammatically inadmissible; see P. iii. 4. 18—अलंखद्वोः प्रतिषेधयोः प्राचां कृत्वा. It is, however, met with in classical literature; see Bk. ix. 100—प्रणियातुमलं हृषम्, Ve. ii. 229 अलम्....आत्मानं खेदधितुं, Mk. iii. 60—अलं सुप्तं जनं प्रबोधयितुं v. 13⁵². न खल्वनिश्चितार्थः—Perceiving the possibility of शक्टदास removing the suspicion by his oral explanation, भागुरायण does not want that he should be called. He thinks of some proposal which should serve the end. That he hits upon and makes in what follows. v. 13⁵⁴ लिखित n.—a writing V. 13⁵⁴ लिखितान्तर n.—another writing v. 13⁵⁵ वर्णसंवाद् m.—identity of hand. v. 13⁵³ राक्षसः स्वगतम् | संवददन्त्यक्षराणि । किं नु शक्टदा-सेन &c—This appears to be the reading of H (N), and I take it to be the original reading. The editions insert शक्टदासस्तु (मम) मित्रमिति विसंवददन्त्यक्षराणि after संवददन्त्यक्षराणि. Here इति may denote हेतु or स्वरूप. In the former case to say in the same breath identical and not identical is self-contradiction. This the author could have avoided by using कृतकानि in place of विसंवददन्ति if he meant to say so. In the other case we have to take the sentence to mean—‘ But the statement that शक्टदास is my friend, goes against it.’ Apart from this interpretation being somewhat far-fetched, the point is lost by the ascription of a different sense to विसंवदति and अक्षराणि. I omit it accordingly.

v. 14 स्मृतं स्यात् पुत्रदाराणाम्—Rākshasa suspects that longing to be in his family शक्टदास colluded with the enemy. He did not for a moment think that his friend was lured by money. So I take अर्थ to mean wife and children; see S. iv. 21, अर्थो हि कन्या परकीय एव ।. On the employment of the objective genitive with स्मृत् see P. ii. 3. 52—अधीरार्थदयेशां कर्मणि. The stanza contains the figure परिकर.

v. 15 करांगुलिप्रणयिनी—attached to the finger, constantly worn on the finger. प्राणार्थिना—longing for his beloved relatives. By the क्षणा process प्राण here means persons as dear as life: see H. 2.92—कोशः कोशावतः प्राणाः प्राणाः प्राणा न भूतेः. There is a fusion (संकर) of काव्य-लिङ्ग and अनुमान in the stanza.

v. 16 एतानि तानि०—With the last two lines compare Ku. vii. 29.—उद्योतिर्भूत्यान्नेत्रिव त्रियामा आमुज्ज्यमानाभरणा चकासे. The figure of speech is उपमा. v. 16³ तातेन भृतपूर्वाणा०—I believe the passage was originally metrical. I am tempted to read it as under:—तातेन भृतपूर्वाणां मौर्यहस्तगतानां हि क्रयादधिगमः कुतः ॥. The substitution of आभरणानाम् for भूषणानाम् and that of चंद्रगुप्त for मौर्य seem to have turned it into prose. The figure of speech here is काव्यलिङ्ग. This part of the speech of Malayaketu is meant to expose the absurdity of the statement क्याद्विगमः of Rākshasa.

v. 17 चन्द्रगुप्तस्य विक्रेतुः—The figure of speech is अत्रमान. v. 17। सुमिष्ट—well-devised, circumstantially laid. दृष्णप्रयोग—The charge of the guilt.

v. 18 लेखोऽयं मम—With उत्तरपदम् compare उपचारपदम्—Ku. iv. 9. For सौहार्द from बुहृ with the बृहि of both the vowels, see P. vii. 3.19—हृषगसिन्धवते पूर्वपदस्य च. In सौहार्द there is the बृहि of the first vowel only. मौर्ये is वैषयिकसमी. अग्रास्य—not clownish, not foolish, that is to say, sensible. उत्तर is the reply to the accusation (अभियोग). It is said to be of four kinds, मिथ्योत्तर, प्रत्यवस्कन्दन, संप्रतिपत्ति and प्राङ्म्याय. In the case before us to disown the letter would be मिथ्योत्तर. That reply would not do; for there was the seal of Rākshasa to it. To charge शकटदास with unfriendliness or to say that Chandragupta offered the ornaments for sale would be प्रत्यवस्कन्दन. Even that would not do; for it was not believable. As to प्राङ्म्याय there was no scope for it. संप्रतिपत्ति was the only kind of reply that remained. These are the cogitations of Rākshasa confounded with the overwhelming circumstantial evidence against him. संप्रतिपत्ति is defined as under :—

श्रुत्वाभियोगं प्रत्यर्थीं यदि तं प्रतिपथते ।
सा तु संप्रतिपत्तिः स्याच्छास्त्रविज्ञिरुदाहता ॥

v. 19 मौर्योऽसौ स्वामिः—While Rākshasa is thinking of pleading guilty, Malayaketu lays a foolishly worded charge of अनार्थत्व on Rākshasa which the latter refutes in the very words of Malayaketu. परपरिचरण, as applied to the Chandragupta, should be dissolved as under :—परम् आत्यन्तिकं परिचरणं यस्य (यत्कर्मकम्). As applied to the speaker the same should be dissolved in the following manner:—परम् आत्यन्तिकं परिचरणं यस्य (यकर्तृकम्). In the former case Rākshasa has to render subservience to Chandragupta. In the latter it is Malayaketu that renders subservience to Rākshasa. दाता सोऽर्थस्य—Construe the line and its sequel as follows:—

सोऽनुगतस्तुभ्यं स्वमतस्यार्थस्य दाता ।
त्वं त्वं नुगतो मद्यं स्वमतमर्थं ददासि ॥
तत्र ते सचिवपदं ननु सत्कारपूर्वं दास्यम् ।
अत्र ते सचिवपदं ननु सत्कारपूर्वं स्वास्यम् ॥

The reading परिचरणपरः does not admit of double meaning and is in consequence not equally applicable to Chandragupta and Malayaketu. I, therefore, read परपरिचरणः instead. It is a case of transposition. अभियुक्त n. is equal to अभियोग m. (accusation). v. 191 So आभेयुक्तव्याहार means stating the accusation, words which state the accusation. v. 191 निणीय m. signifies decision, words which give the finding. In the mouth of Rākshasa the question is turned into petitio principii.

v. 203 Construe the passage as under, supplying the elipses:—यदि स्वार्थे कापि समीहा नास्ति तर्हि लेख्यमिद्धमालंकरणे चेद्विमदानी किञ्, ‘What say you to this letter of yours and to this ornament on your person if you be not actuated by some selfish motive?’

v. 21 परिभूतिधामन्—Subject to contemptuous treatment. क्षत—killed. विपुल here signifies inscrutable (अगाध); see A. S. 1283.

v. 22 कथशोषतां नीतः—reduced to the state in which what remains of a person is anecdotes (कथा) about him, slain. मन्त्राधिकारे आहितगौरवेण—Holding in (higher) estimation the ministership (of the enemy). आममांस—raw flesh, meat. In the stanza under comment Rākshasa is represented as a meat-seller, who formerly butchered Parvataka to fatten Sarvārthasiddhi and who is now going to butcher Malayaketu to fatten Chandragupta. Compare Bk. vi. 132—मांसविक्रियः कर्म व्याघ्रस्यापि विगर्हितम् । मां ब्रता भवताकारि निःशंकं पापदश्चना ॥; compare also U. i. 45. Taken in connection with the prose that goes before it, the stanza contains a fusion (संकर) of उपमा and अर्थमत्तरन्यास. v. 22। गण्डस्योपरि विस्फोटः—This is a line of अनुष्टुप्. With it compare the proverb गण्डस्य उपरि पिङ्गलो in S. ii and V. S. i. Technically गण्ड m. is a tumour; see गण्डमाला. A pimple that bursts and runs forming an ulcer is विस्फोट in the present case. v. 22१ दैवमत्र प्रष्टःयम्—Compare Guj. ‘दैव जाणे’ Eng. ‘God knows’. v. 22२ दैवमत्र प्रष्टःयम् न क्षपणक्षो जीवसिद्धिः—This is tantamount to saying, “Why put me off in that way! There is जीवसिद्धि to tell that to me.” v. 22३ Rākshasa means to say that the enemy must be knowing all his secrets through अविश्वसिद्धि. V v. 22४ नाह विश्रम्भधाती राक्षसः । मलयकेतुः स्वल्पवहम्—The adjective अविश्वम्भधाती which should qualify मलयकेतुः is to be supplied.

v. 23 विष्णुगूप्तं च मौर्य—The simile of दुर्जय involves जातिहीनत्व which serves to embellish rather than disfigure it by the implication of तिन्दा.

v. 24 गौडीनां लोभधूली०—The lodhra flowers in हेमन्त; see R. S. iv. 1, प्रकुक्तुलोऽप्तः हेमन्तकारुः समुपागतः । It is full blown in शिशिर; see Me. नीता लोध्रप्रसवरजसा पाषुतामाननश्चीः. The pollen of the lodhra flower formed an article of toilet. see, Me. 71, Si. ix 46, Ku. 7. II. The figure of speech is उदास.

v. 25 चेतश्चन्दनदास०—Construe the line as follows:—(यतः) चमदभ-दासमोक्षरभसं (मम) चेतः (मां) रुच्यत् न चेत (तत्) कृत्वा स्यात्. The concluding sentence means यदि मम चिरं मां रणाहसान्न निवारयेत् तर्हि तद् कृतव्यं भवेत्. Here रभस is an adjective meaning वेगवत्, see Ki. v. I— रभसया तु दिगन्तदिक्षया. The reader should note that the eagerness displayed by Rakshasa in the fourth act to march on पाटलिपुत्र had in view the release of Chandanadāsa from confinement.

END OF ACT V
called
THE ARTFUL DRAFT.

ACT VI

vi. 1 सञ्च काऊण—having perfected, having completed. पटिहइ
(sk. प्रतिहत) overthrown, balked. जाव जअदि—here यावत denotes साक्षय.

vi. 1 केसवो केसिधाशी—This is a periphrastic expression for Vishnu who, born as Krishna, slew the demon केशिन् in the form of a horse, by thrusting his arm right into his mouth and rending him asunder. The demon was deputed by Kamsa, king of Mathurā, to kill Krishna. See Bhg. X. 37. The speaker, in great glee, pays homage to Vishnu, his tutelary god, to Chandragupta, his sovereign, and to चाणक्य whose secret agent he was, for the bloodless victory won by the minister.

vi. 2 हिथअट्टिआण—whose memory is ever cherished in the heart, i.e. dearly loved. Compare Nāg. i. 46. and K. M. p. 36. The प्राकृत root दूम comes from संस्कृत दून् p. p. The interchange of nasals is exemplified by हम्ह H.i. v. viii. 4.243 from हन् (passive), बुम्म—Hai v. viii. 411⁷ from घूर्ण, खूम Hai. v. viii. 4.243 from खन् (passive) &c. दूम is the parent of the Gujarati verbs दूमा. Compare the stanza with Ki. xi. 28. The speaker is very appropriately named समृद्धार्थक. He is well off; and appears to lead an easy life. To him his long separation from his friend is very painful. Hearing of his arrival he hastens to see him. The stanza contains अप्रसूतप्रसंसा. vi. 29 चिरपचागदो—returned since a long time, arrived early.

vi. 212 दिद्दमेत्तो—चाणक्य saw सिद्धार्थक in the camp of Malayaketu when he surprised and captured it. vi. 213 पिंड—The happy circumstance is the capture of the army of Malayaketu without a blow. vi. 213 देवस्स चन्द्रसिरिणो—चाणक्य must have said दृश्यलाय (Pr. विसलस्स). Siddhārthaka respectfully substitutes देवस्स चन्द्रसिरिणो for it. vi. 222 अलुणिदद्वै (Sk. अश्रोतव्यम्) which may not be imparted or told, secret. vi. 23² भयविलोल—anxious to turn back in dismay. विलोल here means not disposed to stay, longing to go. vi. 227 पतिथाय—These are the kings of the countries of स्खस, शबर, गांधार, यवन, हूण and शक tribes, referred to in vii supra. भहभडपुरुदत्त०. The list of deserters closes with Vijayavarman. No more deserters are mentioned in the play. So I drop पमुह and read भहभड..... विजञ्चवस्मेहि. Possibly the word पमुह has got in owing to the presence of वित्तवस्पमुहा—in the preceding sentence and of भहभडपमुहा in the succeeding speech. vi. 285 देवस्स.....अवरत्ता. The genitive is here loosely used for the ablative. It is a Prakritism. iv. 237 अच्छा मुहे अण्णं गिवहणे—The metaphor is taken from dramaturgy. मुख is the initial and निर्वहण the compleutive division; see notes supra iv. 3. As applied to भद्रभट and his associates, मुख by लक्षणा implies profession and निर्वहण signifies execution, action. They hated Chandragupta and professed admiration for Malayaketu; and these very persons belying those professions made him their prisoner. In the English translation the sentence is freely rendered. vi. 240. The comparison of the policy of चाणक्य and the Heavenly River (देवणदी) is obscure and unusual. The variant देवगदीए involves the repetition of गदी. The poet usually compares the ways of चाणक्य with the ways of Fate in their inscrutableness; see supra v. 3. I, therefore, read गियदीए (Sk. नियत्यै) in place of देवगदीए or देवगदीए here. vi. 240 असु-गिदगदीए—the course of which is unknown, inscrutable. vi. 244. The reading सराभक्त is palpably wrong. For there was no chief left in the camp of Malayaketu. In the case of सराभलाभोअसहिं the objection holds with greater force. अराभलोअं looks periphrastic. So I read अराभअं here. पडिवणे (Sk. प्रतिपत्तम्)—seized; see R. xiv, 47.—सुम-न्नप्रतिपत्तराशिभिः. vi. 247 कहि तं. Here तं (Sk. तत्) stands for मलेञ्ज्ञबलं of the foregoing speech. The captive Mlechchha army formed a part of the triumphal procession described in the next speech.

vi. 3 सजलजलदलीङ उभवहन्ता—bearing a likeness to clouds full of water, black like rain clouds. दन्ती—The regular nominative plural of अग्नी and दन्ती is अग्नेणां and दन्तेणां. But when the plural termination is dropped, we have अग्नी and दग्धी, see Hai. v. viii. 3. 4—ज्ञातरसोऽर्क्. Compare वणहृत्यो (Sk. वनहस्तिनः)—Se. B. viii. 36 and अच्छु। Pd. I.24. As regards the shortening of the penultimate vowel of प्राकृत see Hai. v. viii. 1. 68—पश्च दृखेवा॑ जाअकम्प—shaking, trembling. उत्तरङ्ग (Sk. उत्तराङ्ग) hind parts. For जयण (Sk. जयन n.) in the sense of the mail for a horse see, D. N. iii. 40—जयणं हयकवभिम् and A. S. 915—जयनं विजयेऽशादिसनाहे॒ सज्जा—equipment, accoutrement. Here we have a description of the war elephants and war-horses of चाणक्य in the triumphal procession. vi. 3—It may be noted that the alliteration used in this stanza known as अन्यथमक is the forerunner of rhyme in modern vernaculars of India. There is a union (मंस्तु) of यमक and स्वभावोक्ते in the stanza under notice. vi. 32 उदिशदाहिआरो चिद्दिअ—The root स्था is here used as a verb of being. Compare Nāg. i. 19—अग्रतः॑ रित्वा॒ द्विष्ट्यभिमुखेन स्थेयम्॒ स्थिते चार्धराक्रे॒ It is the parent of the Gujarati verb था and the case terminations थी, थक्के &c. vi. 3¹ बुद्धि॑ अवगाहिदु—For the metaphor of a deep pool see Ki. ii. 3. The English rendering is very free here vi. 3¹⁰. तस्मिं एऽव काले—at that very time, immediately. vi. 3¹². हृति चाणकासं पित्रेदिदं—that was the assertion of चाणक्य, that was what चागक्य said. पित्रेदिदं (Sk. निशेदितम्) is a neuter verbal noun like अभियुक्त of v. 20। The spy who apprised चाणक्य of Rākshasa's leaving the camp of Malayaketu and retracing his steps to पाटलिपुत्र, is variously named उदम्बर, उदुम्बर, उन्दुरु &c. in प्राकृत. These forms are, I think, corruptions of उदेव भ्रम (Sanskrit ऋतंवदक); and प्रियवदक, the personal attendant of Rākshasa, is the spy क्रांतवदक in disguise as appears from the telling similarity of names. vi. 3¹⁵ पश्चाणभणे॑ (Sk. प्रत्ययनयन n.)—recovery. vi. 3¹⁶ अकेदत्यथो—Whose object is unachieved, i.e., before achieving his object. vi. 3²¹ अथ चम्दनदाससप् मोक्षेवेष्वि॑—समुद्गार्थक, as usual inquires of his friend about this too. He never hazards a guess. अथ here introduces a question; compare S.V. अथ भगवौलोकानुप्राप्तं कुराली काश्यपः ।. vi. घादअजगो॑ (sk. घातकजनः)—चान्दालाः, who are the professional executioners. vi. 3²² हृदित्स—this. vi. 3²³ चान्दालब्रेसधारिणो—disguised as चान्दालस. vi. 3²⁶ रज्जुहस्तः पुरुषः—I take this secret agent to be no other than Nipunaka who was promised proper recognition of his good service by चाणक्य, meaning thereby his employment in a more important secret mission; see I 1878-79 supra.

vi. 4 छागुणसंजाऽ—The speaker implies that the noose with which he pretends to hang himself, symbolizes the tactics of चाणक्य to capture Rākshasa. He does not perceive that his master does not want to send him to prison, but to urge him to accept the premiership of Chandra-gupta. For गुग and उपाय see i. 2 supra. The metaphor of पाशमृगया is taken from hunting. The figure is सावयव रूपक. vi. 4⁴ जिष्णुज्जान (Sk. जीर्णोद्यान n.)—an old, that is, weed-grown garden. It is not much frequented. Note पृथ्वीधर on Mk. ix. 115—जीर्णतिविशेषणम् (उदानस्य) विजनस्त्रयापनार्थम्. Compare जरद्रनम्—Dk. P. 94, which is rendered in पदचन्द्रिका by प्रचारराहितं वनम्.

VI. 5—उच्छिङ्गाश्रयकात्तरेव—The speaker here bewails पार्थिववृष्टसन for which see Kām. xv. I. vi. 5 गोत्रान्तर—Chandragupta was known by his matronym Maurya and his step-brothers were distinguished from him by the patronym Nandas. By आस the author means राजस, विराधगुप्त &c. The last line of the stanza compares the body politic without the head, that is, the king, to the decapitated human body. On कुलटा from कुल and अटा (अटतीत्यटा | पाच्याच्च टाप्) see the vārika —शकन्धवादिषु पररूपं वाच्यम्. The compound गतानुगतिक (गतम् अनु गतिर्यस्य) is बहुवीहि. Note the contempt of widow-remarriage in high-class society. There is a fusion (संकर) of उपमा, काव्यलङ्घ and दृष्टान्त here. The reading नारैः is a corruption of नांगैः due to the omission of the अनुस्वार mark. Compare—पादे लग्नामत्र मालामिभेन्द्रः पाशकिश्चामायतामाचकर्ष—Si. xviii. 5. and उभयतः परिकृश्मित्र दीर्घतरापरागम् खेसिकापत्रदम्—Yas. ii. 44-45, where I propose to read अंत्रमालाम् and दीर्घतरापरागम् respectively.

vi. 6 उच्चैरभिजनम् (उच्चैरभिजनो यस्य | बहुवीहिः)—of high birth, of a noble lineage. शब्दिणि is used adverbially; compare Rām. I. 36. 5.—निखिलेन कथां सर्वमृषिमध्ये न्यवेदयत्; R. viii 9—न खरो न च भूयसा भृदुः. The variant छिद्रेण is rejected because the admission of a weak point by Rākshasa in the case of his late sovereign is unseemingly and unlikely; nor is it absolutely required by the circumstances of the case. There is a union (संस्रृष्टि) of उपमा and काव्यलङ्घ.

vi. 7 अतर्कितमृत्युयोगे—whose death (मृत्युयोग) was sudden (lit. unexpected). The sudden death of Nanda was popularly ascribed to the homicidal rites (अभिवार) of चाणक्य. समधिकृत्य—appointing a leader, under the leadership of. The figure of speech is अनुमान. vi. 71 M. T. H. read विवेकशून्यता रुद्धेन्द्रिय instead of मृदृता. In the stanza closely related to this, which comes after, M. has विवेकमृदमतिना रुद्धेन्द्रिय in the third line, and H. has विवेकशून्यमनसा रुद्धेन्द्रिय. There is some confusion here. शून्य and मृदृत seem to have interchanged places; and the words विवेक and अलेञ्ज्यस्य have been reproduced in the prose portion from the verse. Taking this view of things I read अहो मूढता मलयकेतोः ।. Here अहो expresses reproach.

vi. 8. अक्षतः कथमसौ संधात्यते—The stanza denies the possibility of peace while he was hale and whole. जीवनाशं नष्टान्—Done to death. Note the णमुल् construction ; see P. iii. 4. 43-46. The figure of speech is अर्थान्तरन्यात्. vi. 8² The reading कृतः and परम् are respectively adopted from H. (N) and T (M). The majority read अथवा and वरम् instead.

vi. 9 शार्ङ्गज्याकृष्टिः—The first two lines describe the skill of Nanda in archery. प्रजवित्तुरम् is an अःयथीभाव compound. राजि f. or राजिका f. means here a field, a plot ; see Vai. The stanza contains काव्यलिङ्ग. vi. 9³ दशपरिणतयः—turns of the conditions of life.

vi. 10 The suffix क in उद्यानक denotes contempt. There is a fusion (संकर) of पर्याय and उपमा. vi. 10¹ हृदम् refers to the pomp and power described in the preceding stanza. अहो expresses विषाद्.

vi. 11 विपर्वस्तं सौधं—The stanza alludes to the overthrow of the Nanda family, the destruction of the five friendly Mlechchha kings, the perversity of Fate and the delusion of Malayaketu, topics still fresh in the mind of the speaker. सौध is the summer-house (समुद्रगृह), and सरस् is the lake on the bank of which the former was built. महारसभरचनम्—(i) the series of structures whereof was grand, (ii) the series of exploits whereof was magnificent. आरम्भ—(i) a structure, (ii) a deed, exploit. रचना—stringing together, series. विपुण is the opposite of अनुगुण and means adverse. The stanza contains उपमा.

vi. 12 While Rākshasa makes this rueful observation, he sees before his mind's eye the members of the persecuted family of Chandanadāsa being hacked with the executioner's axe and himself not near to render even such service as snakes do to trees in the weed-grown garden. कृपा—tenderness, compassion. The figure of speech is उपेक्षा.

vi. 13 अन्तःशरीरपरिशोषः—The trees of the weed-grown garden are here represented as repairing to the cremation ground to burn themselves alive after their departed sovereign Nanda. It is difficult to reproduce the double meaning of भाशा. With reference to trees it signifies shade ; and with reference to servants loyal unto death it means radiance or radiant features. व्यसन n. disaster, in the case of the trees is the disaster of neglect ; and in that of loyal servants to whom they are compared it denotes the disaster caused by the death of the sovereign. The reading कीटक्षतस्तिभिरखुमिकोद्धमन्तः is rejected, because it is absurd to speak of trees that are dry and withered as exuding liquid matter. vi. 13 The stanza implies the resolve of Rākshasa eventually to follow his sovereign in death as the trees seem to do. The figure of speech is उत्प्रेक्षा. vi. 131. For the interpretation of सुरुभ as meaning योग्य see राघवभट on S. iv. 4—निष्ठयूतश्चरणोपभोगसुरुभौ लाक्षारसः केनचिद् । and compare अतिकान्तः कालो लटभललनामोगसुरुभः, Bh. iii. 32. सुहृत्तमुपविशामि—Mental and physical depression demands rest. vi. 132 MSS. insert पटदशकुविमिश्रः before शब्दः in place of which most of them read नान्दीनादः. They seem to have derived पटह, शब्द and नान्दीनाद from the third line of the stanza that follows. We may not mind the repetition ; but we cannot overlook the absurdity of sound being spoken of as mixed with things like पटह and शब्द. I reject the interpolated adjective.

vi. 14. प्रमथनन्देत्युत्तां—With श्रुतिपथ m. meaning the ear, compare ईश्वरपथ—Mv. vi. 57 signifying the eye. In गीता. xi. 32 we have its synonym श्रवणपथ. For नान्दी in the sense of a kettle-drum see Vai. For the use of it see Hch. P. 137.—228—चक्राण काणाहतानन्दः दिव प्रत्युषनान्दी, नदनान्दीके प्रयाणसमये, and Mv. ii. 4—नान्दीनादप्रभृति ; The figure of speech is उत्प्रेक्षा. vi. 14। पिञ्जुनयति is a denominative from पिञ्जुन m. a tell-tale.

vi. 15 श्रावितोऽस्मि—When Rākshasa left the camp of Malayaketu and turned his silent steps to पाटालेषु त्र, he heard the report of the capture of Malayaketu by भद्रभट and his companions. As he approached the town, he saw the triumphal march of the Mauryan army to the town along with the captive Mlechchha army. These two facts are alluded to in the first half of the stanza. The latter half refers to the ultimate subjection of Rākshasa who finds himself so completely in the power of Chandragupta that he is obliged to accept the office of prime minister in order to save his friend Chandanadāsa. The figure of speech is पर्याय. vi. 15 आसीणो अं—Note the use of the present participle for the present indicative ; compare the same with the use of the past participle for the past which dates earlier. In Gujarāti poetry the present participle does the office of the present indicative. vi. 1510 ध्यसनसब्दाचारिन् a fellow student in the school of misfortune, an unfortunate person like one's self. Compare धेगसब्दाचारिणमिद मनसः and दुःखसब्दाचारिणी Kp. 79 L. 20, p. 176 L. 23. On सब्दाचारिन् see P. vi. 3. 86.—चरणे ब्रह्मचारिणि. It is thus explained by भद्रोजी दीक्षित—ब्रह्म वेदः । तदध्ययनार्थं ब्रतमपि ब्रह्म । तच्चर्तीति ब्रह्मचारी । समानः स सञ्जालचारी. vi. 15.²⁰ The guild of pearl merchants had Chandanadāsa as the head. So जिणुदास should have been the head of another guild. This I take to be that of goldsmiths as can be gathered from the reading of T. (E) and H. (B.K.M.). So I read सोविणिअसेहि instead of मणिआरसेहि here of the editions. सौविणिक is a dealer in gold and golden ornaments. In Gujarat he is called सोनी वाणियो. vi. 15²⁵ लास्यति is equal to जानीयात्. vi. 15²⁷ असुणिद्यथं (Sk. अश्रोत्यम्)—The sad news of his suicide.

vi. 16 औषधपथातिगैः (औषधानां पन्थाने अतिगच्छन्तीति—beyond the power (lit. scope) of drugs, incurable. किमभिविषकलपया—see P. v. 3.67, ईषदसमाप्तौ क्लृप्तदश्यदशीयरः. For the comparison of royal displeasure with poison see Mu. vii 1 infra. जनपद (Sk. जनपद m.) People, subjects ; see Vai. see also Pt.—जनपदहितकर्ता त्यज्यते पार्थिवेन. अलभ्यमनुरक्तवान्—Note the construction. The presence of अविणश in the next speech has induced me to prefer किमयमन्यनाराजनम् to इथय किं कुमारी-जनम्. अवशः (न विद्यते वशं प्रभुत्वं यत्र)—Beyond one's power to counteract, in which one is helpless. Ordinarily the adjective is used with reference to a person. The four lines किमौषध०, किमभिं०, अलभ्य० and किमस्य० together make up a पृष्ठी stanza. vi. 16¹ चन्दनदासोऽस्य०—The pronouns अस्य and तस्य stand for जिणुदास and चंदनदास respectively. vi. 16¹⁵ अपावृतम्.....शोकद्वारम्. Compare—मृत्युद्वारमपावृतम् Rām. iv. 1. 26. vi. 16¹⁶ कष्टतरम्—The comparative denotes excess. vi. 16² वशस्सिणेहसरिसं—as befitted his love for his friend. vi. 16²⁴ पज्जत्तो अत्थो (Sk. पर्यासः अर्थः) means a sum of money just sufficient for the ransom of Chandanadāsa. कुदुम्बभरणपज्जत्तो अत्थो which is the reading of the manuscripts, would mean money that suffices to maintain the family. This amount may or may not be an adequate ransom. So I omit कुदुम्बभरण.

vi. 17 परित्यक्तुं व्यवसितः अर्थः—wealth offered to be given away. व्यवसितः signifies व्यवसायविषयकृतः, that is, निधितः or निर्धारितः here. In this sense it is very rare, in consequence of which the text has been subjected to a number of curious changes by revisionists. I read परित्यक्तुम् in place of प्रियं त्यज्ञुम् and प्रियं मोद्ज्ञुम् of MSS. The stanza contains the figure काव्यलिङ्ग. vi. 17¹. किं प्रतिपदम्—The root प्रपद् means to do, and प्रतिपद् to do or act in answer to what another does, that is to reply. See the next speech where प्रतिपद is paraphrased by प्रतिभाषित. vi. 17¹⁹ सो.....घरभाणं जाच्चादिः—The root चाच् in the passive voice agrees with the indirect object in number and person. vi. 17⁸ The account of Jishṇudāsa ends here. So I omit all that comes after this in MSS. A part of it from जात्वा to सुषाणि is also omitted in H. (M). The critical moments do not permit unnecessary repetition.

vi. 18. शिविनेव०—Construe as follows—भो साधो शरणागतरक्षणाम् समुद्भूतं यशः यथा शिविना निचिते तथा अविना सुहृदा त्वया अपि निचियते. For अवि in the sense of नाथ (a refuge of the destitute) see Vai. and Med. The figure of speech is उपमा. vi. 185 नन्दनेन द्यवसायसुहृदा—Here द्यवसायसुहृदा is an adjunct of अनेन which stands for खड्ड.

vi. 19 युक्तश्रद्धापुलकित इव—for श्रद्धा in the sense of craving (आदर) see Med. and compare श्रद्धालु (दोहदवर्ती), Gujarati सादर. As applied to the sword पुलक m. denotes streaks of superior radiance on the blade ; see Vai—पुलकास्त्वणुराजयः. It is employed in this sense in P. C. i. 34 and Si. xvii. 25. Commentators have missed the technical meaning and have rendered it by रोमाङ्ग and आया respectively. In Pc. i. 34. the streaks of radiance are represented as written characters (अक्षर), whereas in Si. xvii. 25 and here they are regarded as lines of hair standing on end (रोमाङ्गकर). Derive पुलकित as under :— पुलकाः अणुराजयः एव पुलकाः रोमाङ्गकराः संजाताः अस्य. In प्राप्तस्त्व्य (प्राप्तं योग्यं सत्यं यस्य) the word प्राप्त means proper, for which see Vai. and compare Ng. iv. 87—वासोयुगमिदं रक्तं प्राप्ते काले समागतम् and compare also प्राप्तकरिन्, प्राप्तरूप, प्राप्तकाल &c. The phrase प्राप्तस्त्व्यः करेण means which has my right arm for its right companion सत्य—(i) surpassing excellence or (ii) energy, valour. साहस—The daring deed, hinted here, is the prompt determination of putting to the sword the executioners of Chandanadāsa to save him from execution. Note how the secret agent of चाणक्य averts the fateful consequences by a cunning lie. The Stanza contains the union (संसृष्टि) of उपमा, उप्रेक्षा and रूपक.
vi. 19¹ सेद्विचन्दनदात्सजीविदरवस्त्रणं पिलुणिदा—The speaker pretends to have so much faith in Rākshasa that he speaks of the release of Chandanadāsa as an accomplished fact. vi. 19² अमच्छपादा—The plural forms of पाद and चरण are added to names and designations of persons to show great respect or veneration. vi. 19⁷ सोऽहमनुभूतभर्तुविनाशः &c.—There can be no stronger self-condemnation than this, contradicting the compliments paid. For the epithets अनार्थ and यथार्थ राक्षस, the reader is referred to Mu. v. 21, and v. 7 supra. vi. 19⁸ जीविदं परिरक्खलन्ता—purposing to save their lives, that is to say, for their own safety. This peculiar use of the present participle has the sanction of पाणिनि ; see P. iii. 2. 126 रक्षणहेत्वोः क्रियानाः । Compare Si. vii.

साम्योत्थार्य सृगान् विधयमातिषेयो विचक्रमे—In this special sense the present participle is the parent of the future in modern Sindhi. vi. 1922 निष्क्रमन्तः—The mission of the secret agent is but half done. He departs only to dog the foot-steps of Rākshasa to the place of execution, and on the latter's surrendering himself to the executioners, hastens to inform Chandragupta of it in accordance with the previous instructions of चाणक्य.

vi. 20 यदि हि शक्टो—The fabricated letter in the hand-writing of शक्टदास and the feigned mission of Siddhārthaka therewith to पाटल-पुत्र leads Rākshasa to suspect that सिद्धार्थक was a secret agent of चाणक्य and that he seduced शक्टदास and conducted him thither to plot his downfall. Under the supposition he finds it difficult to understand why the enemy had put the executioners to death. If then he dismisses the idea of the perfidy of शक्टदास and the foul play of Siddhārthaka he is at a loss to see how the enemy could have got the mischievous letter written. It is confusion worst confounded. शान्त्रामितेन—by the accredited agent of the enemy. वधाभिकृतो जनः—person officiating as executioners, i.e. चन्डालस. तर्क m.—a reductio ad absurdum speculation, विभावयेत—could cause to exist, could produce or get up.

vi. 21. Executioners appear in pairs in Sanskrit plays. I therefore read घातकाभ्यां hear instead of घातकानां of MSS. With the second line of the stanza compare A. R. 6.—कालायेक्षी दण्डनातिप्रयोगः । अ्यापत्ति-death.

END OF ACT VI
called
A Sham Strangulation.

ACT VII.

vii. 2 हीमाणहे expresses स्वेद. vi. 1-2 With the प्राकृत root मह to wish (Hai. V. viii. 4. 191), compare Vedic मह i. A. to delight, classical मह m. a festival. In the first stanza the politically unwholesome is compared to poison, being equally fatal. In the second it is spoken of as more terrible in its consequences than the physiologically unwholesome. The two stanzas are meant to point out the lenity of Chandragupta who sentenced Clāndanadēsa only to death and not his whole family. The executioners speak the Māgadhi प्राकृत. The figure of speech in the first stanza is उपमा and in the second व्यतिरेक. vii. 2६ अनुहं गर्दि—evil fate, death. vii. 2६ पदिभाल—remedial measures. vii. 2१८ शूलं स्कन्धेन वहन्—see Mk. x. 116-117.

vii. 3. अस्मारेसाण वि—The reading कुले is taken from the Bikancer fragment of the Mudrārākshasa. For अस्माद्दशानाम् in the sense of अस्माकम् see i. 2018 notes, supra.

vii. 4 मोक्षग आभिसाइ—The figure of speech is अप्रत्युतप्रशीमा. With the stanza compare the following piece of मुक्तपीड (A.C. 726-753):—वसम्यरव्येषु चरन्ति द्वर्वा पिबन्ति तोयान्यपरिग्रहाणि । तथापि वध्या हरिणा नराणां को लोकमाराधयितुं समर्थः ॥.

vii. 4। भो जिष्णुदास—She calls जिष्णुदास to her to commit her son to his care. For she was determined to follow her husband in death. But जिष्णुदास had just turned back, as we learn from the next speech. Hence there is no reply. vii. 4॥ एदे अहम् पिभवअस्सा०—This is said by way of defence in reply to the stricture दुलहा ते हु माणुसा जे &c. Here the plural एदे, पिभवअस्सा &c. is the plural of respect.

vii. 4॥ णिवहमाणा (Sk. निर्वत्तमानाः)—returning home, dragging the body homeward. To avoid the tautology involved in असुपाद &c. and बाहगरुदाए I omit असुपादमेत्केण किंपदीआरा. The variant णिवावसलिला for पदीआरा fails to remove the tautology noticed. It will be seen from the speech under comment that the report of the suicide of जिष्णुदास by fire, made by the man with a rope to Kākshasa in the weed-grown garden, was a fiction. vii. 4॥ परलोऽपि पत्थिदो अज्ञो ण देसन्तरं—Note the two sorts of अनुगमन, (i) seeing a person off or अनुब्रजन, for which see K. V., and (ii) following a person in death or अनुमरण, for which see K. p. 773, l. 79. In the present case Chandanadāsa was going to be impaled. So his wife remonstrates with him when he bids her go home; for she means to follow him to the other world. vii. 4.२५ भत्तुगो चलणे अणुगुच्छन्तोए अपाणुगाहो होदु—This sort of suicide was regarded very meritorious, so she wishes to bless herself with it. vii. ३० अणुगिहन्दु णो—She blesses her son before her death. The reading सरण्णाओ is taken from Moro. MSS. vii. 4॥ पदसु अपञ्जिमं पिदुणो पादेसु—Like उत्तम and अनुत्तम, the terms पञ्जिम and अपञ्जिम in the sense of final, are convertible. It is this convertibility that gives rise to various readings in the present case as in Mal. ix. 240. The termination सु in पदसु is derived from the अत्मनेपाद termination स्व. vii. 4॥ किं दाणि मए तादविरहितेण अणुचिट्ठिव्य—The boy would rather die than live fatherless. He does not like to outlive his father. Chandanadāsa understands his words differently and directs him to fly from चाणक्य, lest the latter should put him also to death in his search after the family of Rakshasa. vii. 450. अवरस्ते.

भविद्वये विनासे०—Compare H. I. 44

धनानि जीवितं चैव परर्थे प्राप्तु उत्सृजेत्।

तत्रिमित्ते वरं स्यागो विनाशो नियते रिथते ॥

vii. 459 भो भोः शूलायतनौ. The root आयत् I. A. signifies to depend on. Hence शूलायतनौ (शूलमायतनं जीवनाश्रयो ययोः) denotes those who depend on, that is to say, make a living by, impaling culprits, in other words, those who execute culprits. With शूलायतन compare अर्थायतन in A. P. 115. 17, अर्थायतनशाङ्कुषु तथैव स्यात् कुतूहली. For the reason given in vi. 21 notes I read शूलायतनौ instead of शूलायतनाः of T. The variant सनापते of M. H. is absurd.

vii. 5. मित्राणां ध्यसने—There is a reference here to Chandanadāsa. The plural मित्राणाम्—is the plural of respect. वच्चना—circumvention. For मृत्यु in the sense of यम see Med. The stanza येन स्वामिकुलं contains the figure काव्यलिङ्ग. In the last line there is रूपक also. vii. 5!—अमच्छ किं एदं—The pearl merchant was going to say अमच्छ किं एदं सब्वं पि आआसं णिष्फलं करन्तेण तुए अणुचिद्विदं—But Rākshasa catches only the first three words and, taking them differently, interrupts his speech with the reply त्वदीयस्य सुचरितैऽ० vii. 5⁶ स्वार्थं एवानुष्टितः० By स्वार्थ is meant the purpose nearest to the heart of Rākshasa, which he had decided upon achieving after much deliberation; see vi 21 supra. It was the release of Chandanadāsa. This purpose (अर्थ) of his (स्व) he serves by surrendering himself up to the enemy.

vii. 6. असञ्जनहाचिः (असत्यः जनानां रुचयः यस्मिन्) is a बहुवीहि compound. The मत्वर्थीय suffix विन् in यस्मिविन् denotes superlativeness (अतिशायन). The preposition वि in विजुद्ध shows superior excellence (विशेष) शिवि lived in a sinless age. But Chandanadāsa belonged to the sinful Kali age. Buddhas suffered in their own person; see Bauddha Jātaka stories. But the pearl merchant exposed himself and his family to sufferings. The stanza contains a fusion (संकर) of काव्यलिङ्ग and ध्यतिरेक. vii. 6⁸ I read णन्दकुलशंतुण्डभश्च dropping the sustained metaphor (परंपरितरूपक) representing the Nanda family as a mountain chain and चाणक्य as the thunderbolt destroying it. I do this in order that it may accord with मोलिअकुलपडिस्टावाद्यश्च. For the use of संचूर्ण see Dh. V. S., stanza 67. vii. 6¹³ अद्यवणीदेणिप्रालेश्वाद्योवेहवे which is the reading of H. (M). literally means, 'the wealth of whose (resourceful) brain has been caused to run out completely by the tactics of चाणक्य I derive निगलित from निगल् and take it to mean नितरां गलित. Compare Bh.I.44, गलितविभवाः (नरः) and Bh.I.56, गलितयौवना (कामिनी). vii. 6¹⁶ जयनिका is a diminutive of जयन्. From जागर m. and जयन् n. both meaning an armour, we have in Old Gujarati जरह and जीण; see Kā Pra. 1-भट्टाडली । किस्था संनाह । जरह, जीण, जीवरसी, वज्रझी, अङ्गरसी, लोहबन्ध. चाणक्य has no time to doff his armour. He has just returned from the field, having forced the Mlechchha army to surrender. So he is ushered on the stage in the fine coat of mail which left visible the face only.

vii. 7. पटान्ते in a cloth. Compare तोशान्ते, Rām. V. 10,28—गाढ महति तोयान्ते प्रसुप्तमिव कुञ्जरम्. The noun अन्त m. in the sense of the interior is related to अन्तर्. From it is derived the locative termination औंत in Marathi as मौंत is from its synonym मध्य in Gujarati. सदागति m. the wind. अनेकरः (अनेकारथो विवरति) an elephant; compare द्विर. The cumulative particle च in the fourth line implies that the capture of Rākshasa is as the holding of fire in a piece of cloth, the staying of the wind with meshes, the forcing of the lion into a cage and the stemming of the ocean with a pair of arms, all combined. The stanza contains आतेशयोक्ति. The author of Alan. Kau. takes it as an instance of निदशना; see Alan. Kau. 262-63.

VII. 8 आकरः सर्व०—There is the union (संस्थिति) of काम्यालिङ्ग and उपमा. कल्पना, from the causal of कल्प् i. A, means (i) devising and (ii) getting ready. So with reference to the army it signifies martial equipment, and with reference to चाणक्य formation of political schemes. In the time of Amarasimha कल्पना denoted the accountrement of elephants. It is here used to denote the military equipment of an army in general. vii. 9 The stanza एषभिः कल्पना० contains तुष्टयांगिता.

vii. 9⁶ चाणक्य ascribes all the manœuvres to Chandragupta's solicitation to be reconciled with Rākshasa. Agreeably to this I drop मया which MSS. insert before लोकितः.

vii. 10. सर्वोऽयं वृषलस्य०—To impress Rākshasa favourably about Chandragupta, चाणक्य shrinks in the background and brings the king to the front. Henceforth we have the delineation of the policy of conciliation (सामन्). It is five-fold, namely, गुणकर्त्तन, सम्बन्धारुप्यान, परस्परोपकारसंदर्शन, आयतिसंप्रकाशन and आत्मोपसंधान; see Kām. xvii. 4-5. The present speech illustrates the आत्मोपसंधान mode. च तथा—as well as, and (तत्त्वं च). The indeclinable किल expresss अर्थात्, and goes with every one of the seven deceptions mentioned in the first three lines. vii. 10³ Chandragupta learns the news of the arrival of Rākshasa from the secret agent of the Weed-grown garden. So he appears on the scene in the nick of time. For विभवतः in the sense of around see M. ii. 7, M. v. 30-31 and Nāg iii. 45-46.

VII. 11 विलक्षणं गतानाम्—confounded, put to shame. For प्रतिष्ठा in the sense of fixedness, permanence (स्थित) see Vai. The figure of speech is समासोक्ति.

VII. 12. In विगुण the word गुण m. means the bow-string ; so the compound विगुणीकृत् signifies unstrung. The कृत् suffix उत् in जागरूक denotes habit (तत्त्वान्वयः); see P. iii. 2. 131-165. गुरुतः is the plural of respect. The stanza विगुणीकृत् contains a fusion (संकर) of विभावना and काव्यलिङ्गः. vii. 12² There is much confusion here in mss. One thing however is certain. Chandragupta does not require to be told that Rākshasa was the minister of his father and that he should pay respects to him. I therefore eliminate all words relating to this, and retain those only that refer to चाणक्य's greeting Chandragupta on the welcome arrival of Rākshasa to पाटालपुत्र. The reading adopted is a compromise between MH on one hand and T. on the other.

vii. 13 बाल एव हि—The figure of speech here is उपमा.

vii. 14 जगत् किम्—which part of the world. विजितम् is equal to विजितं भवेत्. गुरु stands for सुरगुरु or बृहस्पति. He is one of the divine writers on politics. चाहृगुण्य n. (चद् + गुण + स्वार्थे ध्यन्) means the six courses of action (पद्मगुणः) collectively, that is to say, politics. The readings आर्थे चार्ये च and आर्थे त्वार्थे च make a reference to चाणक्य. But the latter wants to shrink in the background, disclaiming personal political influence over Chandragupta. So the said readings are rejected. In the passage under notice also there is the आस्मैपसंधान or आस्मसमर्पण mode of conciliation. The figure of speech here is रूपकः. vii. 14 शृशति मां भृत्यभावेन कौटिल्यादेवः—Rākshasa at first takes amiss the terms अमारथ and आर्थ use by चाणक्य and Chandragupta with reference to him. He suspects that they were mocking him. On a second thought he believes that Chandragupta was addressing him in the complimentary language by way of courtesy. Because he was the minister of his father, he was paying respect to him. As yet Rākshasa does not perceive that it was neither mockery nor courtesy, but a sincere conciliatory offer of premiership.

vii. 15 द्रव्यं जिगीषुम्—An ambitious King (जिगीषु m.) that is (at the same time) a good King. (द्रव्य n.). Here द्रव्यम् means सदूक्ष्म्यम्, सदूक्ष्म्यभूतम्. अद्रव्यम् is the opposite of that. विशुद्धनय—of correct, i.e., unerring policy. The figure of speech in the stanza is अप्रस्तुतप्रशंसा.

vii. 16 अजस्रम्—incessantly. शून्य—non-existent (असत्); hence अशून्य—existent (सत्). So अशून्यासन means having saddles on them, i.e. saddled. On the attention bestowed on elephants see Pal. 4 and Ar. ii. 48. The war accoutrements of elephants (परिकल्पना or कल्पना) consisted of लोहजाल, दन्तबन्ध &c. It is the chain armour (लोहजाल) that is here referred to. चंश, signifying the backbone by उपादानलक्षण, here denotes the back; see Yas. p. 42, ll. 3 4, करिण हव स्वच्छन्दाचार-परागकलुभिता निजवंशस्थमीमुपयच्छमानस्य. Compare Gujarāti चांसो. दृष्ट-रिदर्पच्छिदः—Here there is a complimentary reference to the mighty foes of Nanda that Rākshasa had humbled. The speech embodies the गुणकीर्तन mode of conciliation. The figure of speech is उदात्त. vii. 16¹ न भवतः शङ्खः—Without your accepting the ministerial sword Chandanadusa does not live. vii. 16² प्रहृ adj.—Submissive. vii. 16⁷ आर्यप्रसाद of course means राक्षसानुग्रह. vii. 16¹² सोऽयमिदार्नी जानीते—Compare the Gujarāti idiom हवे ए जाणे. vii. 16¹³ विज्ञापना—counsel or advice (as to what should be done with Malayaketu). Technically it is the king who disposes, the ministers only giving their opinion which in the language of the court is called विज्ञापना. vii. 16¹⁵ वर्य मलयकेतावुचिताः—We lived at the court of Malayaketu. The locative here expresses सामीप्य. vii. 16¹⁶ राजा चाणकय-मुखमवलोकयति—This is a look of assent (अनुशा). Compare Bk. xiv. 18—ईक्षांचक्रेऽथ सौमित्रिम्। where Mallinātha renders ईक्षांचक्रे by दृशैव...अनुशातवान्. In Se. B. i. 48—आणव बलाई से विलगाइ दिट्ठी—there is the look of command. vii. 16¹⁷ प्रतिमानयितव्यः.....प्रणयः—The rendition of the forfeited kingdom illustrates the गृहीतप्रतिदान type of the policy of दान, for which see Kām. xvii. vii. 16¹⁸ अमात्यराक्षसेन विज्ञापितः प्रथञ्चति—Of course Rākshasa simply said परिक्षयन्तामस्य प्राणाः।. But a king dispossessed of his territories is politically dead. That he might live, he should be reinstated. The advice of Rākshasa, liberally interpreted, thus includes the restoration of his territories to him. vii. 16²² श्रेष्ठी चन्दनदासः.....पदमारोत्यताम्—This is the परस्परोप-कारसंदर्शन mode of conciliation.

vii. 17 हस्त्यश्च is a समाहारद्वन्द्व compound, denoting horses and elephants forming parts of an army, that is to say, war-horses and war-elephants; see P. ii. 4.2—दन्दश्च प्राणितूर्यसेनाक्षानाम् । The text here has suffered greatly at the hands of revisionists. A glance at Dr. Hillebrandt's edition will suffice to show what a mess they have made. Apart from its being an anachronism, the boastful reference to the tying up of the hair on his head by चाणक्य in the hearing of Rākshasa is egggegeously inconsistent with his settled policy of conciliation. I, therefore, reject the line पूर्णप्रतिज्ञेन मया केवलं बध्यते शिरो and reconstruct the stanza with the help of the prose and verse portion that goes before it. vii.172 भी राजन् चन्द्रः—Now that the sovereignty of Chandragupta is made secure, चाणक्य addresses his दूष्ळु protégé as राजन् चन्द्रगुप्तः. The terms राजन् and अमारत्य are meant to emphasize the relation of kingship and premiership vii. 174 After किमतः परं वियमर्ति the editions add राक्षसेन समं भैरवी० which is outrageously offensive. It is beyond doubt spurious. vii. 175 लदिदं भवतु—Here there is a sudden change. The speaker drops the character of a player asks his brother-player who personated चाणक्य to bless the then reigning sovereign Avantivarman. Compare the case of सूतधार and नटी in the prologue translating themselves to पाटलिपुत्र of the time of the Maurya king Chandragupta.

vii. 18 वाराही ततु—the form of a boar. After the dissolution of the World at the end of the Kalpa the earth had remained submerged in water. To raise it up from the depth of the ocean Vishnu, incarnating himself as the primeval Boar went down to the bottom of the ocean and recovered the earth which he bore on the snout. The demon Hiranyaksha who had been there for the conquest of the watery realms of Varuna, stopped him from carrying it away; and there was severe fighting. After a contest of a thousand years Vishnu slew the demon and raised up the earth. See Bhg. iii. 13-19. प्रलयपरिगता—submerged in (lit. overwhelmed by) the watery deluge. Here प्रलय stands for जल-प्रलय. आत्मयोनिं (आत्मा योनिः यस्य)—self-begotten, uncreate. अवनविधी अनुरूपाम्—suiting His mission of rescuing, proper for the work of rescuing. प्राक्—formerly, in ancient times. भूतधारी (भूतानां प्राणिनां धारी जननी)—the earth. रेणु—The हणः who made inroads from the northwest in the sixth century. अवनितवर्मा—See the Introduction. For चन्द्रु in the sense of a relative see Vai. The figure of speech is अभेदातिशयोक्ति.

called

The Pact of Peace.

MUDRĀRĀKSHASA OR THE SIGNET RING.

ACT I

THE SIGNET FOUND.

There enters the manager of the play at the conclusion of the invocation by the Manager of the Theatrical Preliminaries.

STAGE MANAGER—May the ingenuity of Lord Śiva protect you,— of Śiva who wished to keep back from the Goddess Gaurī, (the name of) the river-goddess Gangā by the following (evasive) replies (to her questions):—Gaurī—Who is this, so fortunate, that is borne on the head? Śiva—It is Śāśikalā (the crescent moon). Gaurī—Is that (i. e., Śāśikalā) the name [of her]? Śiva—That is the name indeed. It is known to you; and yet how is it that you (seem to) forget it? Gaurī—I (mean to) refer to one of the female sex, not to the Moon. Śiva—Then let Vijayā speak, if you do not believe the testimony of Chandra (the moon).

Moreover,—May the dance of Śiva, the conqueror of the demon Tripura, awkwardly performed in consideration of local conditions, protect you,—of Śiva who staid the subsidence of the earth by a gentle tread of his feet, went through brachial movements (lit. gesticulated) only by a repeated contraction of his arms outreaching all the worlds, and refrained from fixing his terrible eye emitting sparks of fire on its objectives for fear of conflagration.

I must not be long. (For) I am ordered by the audience that the new drama, named the Signet Ring, a composition of poet Viśākhadatta, son of Mahārāja Bhāskaradatta and grandson of Sāmanta Vateśvaradatta, should be staged by me. And I am really very much pleased, as I have to perform it before an audience that can appreciate the excellence of a poetical work. For:—

Sowing in a good soil thrives even in the case of a dullard. A bumper crop of paddy does not depend on the qualification of the planter.

So I, with my household, begin the performance forthwith. How now, what is this? Domestics are unusually busy in their appointed tasks as if there were a great festival. Thus:—

One here is fetching water; another is preparing fragrant paints (lit. is grinding aromatic substances); a third is weaving fine wreaths, and one there is repeating a sweet hum keeping time with the descending movement of the pestle.

Well, I will call my wife and inquire. Looking in the direction of the attiring room—

Come quick on purpose, O noble lady, you, who adept in policy, full of resources, securing stability and gaining the three ends, are the Science of Polity incarnate in (the regulation of) the household. 5

ACTRESS. entering—Here I am, my noble lord. May you, noble one, favour me with the dictation of your command.

STAGE MANAGER—Noble lady! Let alone the dictation of command. Just tell me whether the family is blessed with a dinner-invitation to revered Brāhmaṇas or whether there are welcome guests come to our house, on which account these special dinner-preparations are being made.

ACTRESS—Revered Brāhmaṇas are invited to dinner by me, my noble lord!

STAGE MANAGER—What is the occasion?

ACTRESS—They say there is to be the seizure (i. e. eclipse) of Chandra (i. e. the moon).

STAGE MANAGER—Who says so?

ACTRESS—Townfolks say so, to be sure.

STAGE MANAGER—Noble lady! I have carefully studied the science of stars. By the bye let the special dinner preparation for revered Brāhmaṇas be proceeded with. But as regards the seizure of Chandra you are misled (lit. deluded). Look here.

The malignant assailant (Rāhu), in concert with Ketu, now seeks to assail by might Chandra (i. e. the moon) in full splendour—

Voice behind the Stage—Ah! Who is this that seeks to assail Chandra (i. e. Chandragupta) inspite of me?

STAGE MANAGER—But the union of Budha (Mercury) saves him. 6

ACTRESS—My noble lord! Who is this that wishes to save Chandra (i. e. the moon) from the attack of the assailant (Rāhu), though a denizen of the earth?

STAGE MANAGER—In sooth, noble lady, I did not notice him. Well, I shall make him out by his voice on being questioned again. He repeats ‘The malignant assailant’ &c.

Voice behind the Stage—Ah! Who is this that seeks to assail Chandragupta inspite of me?

STAGE MANAGER—Oh, I see.
It is Kautilya—

The actress shakes with fear.

STAGE MANAGER— Of crooked policy who forcefully consumed the Nanda family like reeds in the flames of his wrath.

Hearing of the seizure of Chandra (i. e. the moon) he comes, apprehending the seizure of the namesake Chandra, the Maurya. 7
So let us withdraw. They retire.

END OF PROLOGUE.

There enters Chānakya, touching the knot of hair on the head in anger.
CHĀNAKYA—Ah! Who is this that seeks to assail Chandragupta inspite of me?

Which person, doomed to die, now wishes not the lock of hair on my head tied up which forms the black wreath of smoke moving to and fro, of the fire of my anger and has been the fatal female cobra to the Nanda family? 8

Which person, moreover, deluded in the estimate of the strength of his adversary and his own, would suffer instant death after the fashion of the moth, braving the blaze of my raging fury that has been to the Nanda family what the forest conflagration is to a wood? 9

Haloo, Sāriigarava!

PUPIL—entering; What is your command, Revered Sir?

CHĀNAKYA—A seat for me, my dear boy, to sit down.

PUPIL—Revered Sir! The room beside the entrance door is furnished with mats. So the Revered One may be pleased to sit here.

CHĀNAKYA—My dear boy! It is not the habitual severity of the preceptor towards his pupil, that possesses me. I am put out by the cares of state (lit. close application to state affairs). Taking his seat, to himself, on the withdrawal of the pupil. How now? Has the matter gained publicity among citizens, that, filled with resentment at the destruction of the Nanda family, Rākshasa has made an alliance with Malayaketu, son of Parvataka, burning with rage on account of the murder of his father, who has been urged on by the offer of the entire Nanda territories, and that he is preparing to assail Vrishala with a vast army of Mlechchha chiefs reinforced by (the troops of) Malayaketu ? After a moment's reflection. Aye, what of that ? I am able to avert it inspite of publicity. For, having publicly vowed to extirpate the Nanda family, I have (already) crossed the impassable river of that vow.

The fire of my wrath is like a forest-conflagration. It has destroyed the members of the Nanda family deserted by terror-stricken citizens like bamboo canes forsaken by terrified birds, having scattered in abundance the ashes of delusion cast up by the blast of policy to overwhelm their ministers that served as (a protecting ring of) trees about them. It has, moreover, pread far and wide the smoke of grief in the heavens of the youthful widows of the enemies wherewith it has darkened their moon-like faces. Now that it had no fuel to feed it, it has gone out, not that it has spent itself. 10

Moreover,—Those (very) persons who, with expressions of censure stifled within from fear of king Nanda, formerly saw me helplessly ousted from the principal seat, grieving with downcast faces, have now seen that Nanda with his family similarly hurled down from the throne by me as the lord of elephants with his herd is hurled from a mountain peak by the lion. 11

Though the extreme vow has (already) been fulfilled by me, I still wield the sword for the sake of Vrishala.

(Otherwise), I have uprooted from the soil the Nine Nandas who were like barbs (rankling) in the heart; and have firmly established the sovereignty in the person of the Maurya like the lotus plant in a lake. Thus I have, with assiduity, portioned out to the foe and the friend the choice and appropriate fruit of incurring my wrath and winning my favour. 12

Nay, how can the Nanda family be said to be uprooted and the sovereignty firmly established in the person of Chandragupta, as long as Rākshasa is not secured ? Reflecting I wonder at the extreme devotion of Rākshasa to the Nanda family ! It was not, indeed, possible, as long as a single member of the Nanda family lived, to stop his activities on behalf of the Nanda family in order that he might be induced to accept the premiership of Chandragupta... With this conviction I caused to be murdered Sarvā-thasidhhi of the Nanda family, poor man, though he had retired to the penance forest. Now then, gaining over Malayaketu he is in sooth making mightier preparation to overthrow (lit. extirpate) us. Fixing his gaze in the air. Minister Rākshasa ! You deserve all praise.

(Common) People serve a king from motives of self interest so long as he is in power. Those who cling to (lit. follow) him in adversity, do so in the hope of his coming back to power. But those who, like you, uphold their master's cause even after his death with disinterested devotion, cherishing a grateful memory of former favours, such worthy persons are difficult to be met with.

Hence it is that we endeavour to win you over. For—

What is the good of having a servant full of devotion but wanting in intelligence and void of valour ? Of what use, too, is a servant endowed with intelligence, and valour, but void of devotion ? Those only who combine in them the qualities of intelligence, valour and devotion, contributing to greatness, are servants (Bhrityas) of the king, the rest being (parasite) to him as his wife (Bhāryā) is, in weal and woe.

As to how he could be reconciled to the acceptance of the premiership of Chandragupta, I do not sleep over the matter. Nay, I try my utmost to secure him. Thus (1) I have spread an evil report among the people, to the effect that our ally king Parvataka, who had laid us under deep obligation, had been piteously murdered by Rākshasa by means of the poison-maid, believing that the destruction of either the Vrishala or Parvataka would be dealing a (mortal) blow on me Chānakya. With a view to corroborate the (said) report, so that people might give credence to it, I purposely caused Bhāgurāyaṇa to scare away Malayaketu, son of Paryataka, by whispering into his ears that it was I Chānakya that had murdered his father :—I did it, knowing that it was possible to arrest him with tact even if he should make war (with us) backed by the counsels of Rākshasa, but that it was not possible to wipe away the infamy of having murdered Parvataka becoming (indelibly) manifest by the imprisonment of Malayaketu. (2) Moreover, with a desire to know the loyal and the disaffected on our side and on that of the enemy I have employed spies in various guises who know how to personate people of different localities, different dialects, different customs and different costumes. (Through their agency) I closely scrutinize the movements of the partisans of the Ministers of Nanda who reside in Kusumapura. (3) Then besides I have turned Bhadrabhaṭa and other high officials who had been Chandragupta's champions in the war of revolution into seeming malcontents having given them various grounds of disaffection. (4) I have further appointed as personal attendants of the king trusted persons whose loyalty is proof to temptation, that are ever vigilant in co-operating the evil doings of assassins, poisoners and others. (5) Furthermore there is a Brāhmaṇa fellow-student and friend of mine, by name Induśarman, who has gained great proficiency in the Science on Polity by Sukra and in the science of heavenly bodies in its sixty-four subdivisions. I had invited him to Kusumapura in the guise of a Buddhist monk just after I had taken the vow to destroy the Nanda family, and made him cultivate friendship with all the ministers of Nanda. He has in particular, got intimate with Rākshasa. He will now render great service to me. So there is nothing that I, for one, have omitted to do. It is the Viśhala alone, the principal member of the body politic, that sits at ease, throwing the burden of state affairs on us. And, for certain, it is only when sovereignty is free from the extreme troubles of managing personally the affairs of state, that it conduces to happiness. For—

Lords of men and of elephants, though all-powerful, are for the most part woefully unhappy, as is natural, when they have in person to toil (lit. provide) for and then enjoy. 15

Then enters a spy (of Chāṇakya) with a pictoral representation of Yama and his realm.

Spy—Fall down at the feet of Yama. Of what avail are other petty gods ? For it is he indeed that carries off the soul of the devotees of others trembling (in agony). 16

Moreover a person gains livelihood by the grace of a god won over by devotion, however severe he may be. We gain our livelihood by the grace of the very Yama who is the destroyer of men. 17

Now I enter this house, exhibit the pictoral chart and sing songs (of piety).

PUPIL, observing him—Don't you enter the house, good fellow.

SPY—Hallo Brāhmaṇa ! Whose house is it ?

PUPIL—It is the house of our Preceptor, Revered Chāṇakya of auspicious name.

SPY, with a smile—Hallo Brāhmaṇa ! Then indeed it is the house of my spiritual brother. So let me in. I will preach sacred truths to your Preceptor.

PUPIL, angrily—What do you say ? Are you better acquainted with sacred truths than our Preceptor ?

SPY—Hallo Brāhmaṇa ! Don't you get offended ? Surely it is not every one that knows every thing. There are certain things that are known to your Preceptor, and there are certain things that are known to persons like us.

PUPIL—You seek to rob our Preceptor of his attribute of all-knowing.

SPY—Well, then, Brāhmaṇa, if your Preceptor be all-knowing let him ascertain who do not like Chandra.

PUPIL—Whether he knows it or not, of what consequence will it be to him ?

SPY—Certainly, Brāhmaṇa, your Preceptor will know of what consequence the knowledge of it will be to him. Meanwhile know you this much that day lotuses do not like Chandra, Just see—

The action of day lotuses that look so fair does not accord with their look ; for they bear antipathy to Chandra in full splendour.

CHĀΝAKYA, hearing the spy, to himself—Ah ! This fellow means to say that he knows those who do not like Chandragupata.

PUPIL—How is it ? You talk what is impertinent.

SPY—It would be pertinent and nothing but pertinent, if I get one with an intelligent listener.

CHĀΝAKYA—Come in, good fellow ! (Here) you have that listener (in me.)

SPY—I do. Entering and making up to Chāṇakya—Prosperity to you, Revered Sir !

CHĀΝAKYA, observing his features, to himself—Oh ! This is Nipuṇaka, employed to know the minds of men. Aloud. Well come, good fellow. Sit you down.

SPY—As the Noble One commands. He squats on the ground.

CHĀΝAKYA—Now give me an account of your mission. Do the subjects love the Vrishala ?

SPY—Certainly they do. Since all the causes of disaffection are removed by your worthy self, the subjects ardently love His Majesty Chandragupta of auspicious name. There are, however, three persons in the city attached to Minister Rākshasa by previous friendship and regard, that are intolerant of the sovereignty of esteemed Chandragupta.

CHĀNAKYA, with rising anger, to himself—I should rather say they are intolerant of their own lease of life. Aloud. Do you know their names?

SPY—How should I have reported them to the Revered One, if I had not known their names?

CHĀNAKYA—In that case I should like to know them.

SPY—Note then, Revered Sir! Person number one, siding with the enemies, is a Kshapanaka—

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—A Kshapanaka siding with the enemy? (Who can he be?)

SPY—Jīvasiddhi by name, who directed against king Parvata the poison-maid employed by Minister Rākshasa.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—Oh! It is Jīvasiddhi. As for him he is my secret agent. Aloud. Now which is number two?

SPY—Number two is a penman, by name Śakaṭadāsa, who is a dear friend of Minister Rākshasa.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—A penman means one of little consequence. Never-the-less I have set Siddhārthaka after him in the garb of friendship; for it is not proper to neglect an enemy however insignificant. Aloud. And now I want to know number three.

SPY—Number three is the head of the guild of pearl-merchants living in the Flower square, by name Chandanadāsa, the alter ego of Minister Rākshasa, in whose charge the Minister has left his family while he has escaped from the town.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—Surely, he must be the most intimate of his friends. For Rākshasa is not a man to leave his family in charge of one who is not his second self. Aloud. How am I to know, good fellow, that Rākshasa has left his family in charge of Chandanadāsa?

SPY—Noble Sir! This signet ring will help you to know it.

The spy presents the signet ring to Chānaka.

CHĀNAKYA, examining the signet ring, to himself in joy—Ha! I here have Rākshasa attached to my finger, I must say. Aloud. My good fellow ! I wish to hear at length how you came by this signet ring.

SPY—Listen, Revered Sir ! Commissioned by your noble self to inquire (secretly) into the actions of the citizens, I happened, in my rambles with the pictorial chart of Yama and his realm exciting no one's suspicion in gaining access to private quarters, to enter to-day the house of the head pearl-merchant Chandanadāsa, where I spread out the pictoral chart and commenced singing songs (of piety).

CHĀNAKYA—What then ? Proceed.

SPY—Then a boy nearly five years old, very lovely in person, sought to come out of an apartment with eyes wide open through curiosity common to children. At this there arose inside the said apartment a confused noise of ladies crying out “O, the boy ! He goes out” which expressed their sense of alarm. Then a lady just peered through the door of the apartment, chid the boy, and with her tender creeper-like arm caught him by the hand as he was coming forth. While she stretched her hand with fingers extended in her hurry to catch hold of the boy, this signet ring, made to suit the finger of a male, slipped from her hand on the door-sill, and gliding down unnoticed by her, just lay close to my feet. Observing the name of Minister Rākshasa engraved on it, I brought it to the Revered One. This is how I came by the signet ring.

CHĀNAKYA—I understand. Now, good fellow, you may go. This (good service of yours) will meet with proper recognition before long.

SPY—I obey, Noble Sir !

Exit.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo Śāringarava !

PUPIL, entering—What is your command, Revered Sir !

CHĀNAKYA—Get me an inkstand and paper, my boy !

PUPIL—I do. Going out and re-entering. Here are the writing materials, Revered sir !

CHĀNAKYA, taking them, to himself—What shall I write now ? It is to be an instrument of victory over Rākshasa, this writing of mine.

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER, entering—Victory to you, Noble Sir !

CHĀNAKYA, to himself, with joy—I hail the pronouncement of victory. Aloud. What brings you hither, Śonottarā ?

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER—Revered Sir ! His Majesty, esteemed Chandragupta, touching his head with folded hands that look like a lotus bud, respectfully states, 'I wish that I may with the permission of the Revered Preceptor, give away to holy Brāhmaṇas the ornaments previously worn by king Parvata to secure His Majesty's bliss in the other world.'

CHĀNAKYA, With gratification, to himself—Bravo, Vrishala ! Your request, gives response to my heart's desire. Aloud. Śonottarā, say to the Vrishala in my name these words in reply:—'Indeed, you know Customary observances ! Good, my Prince, you may carry out your wish. But as the ornaments worn by king Parvata while alive (lit. before) are of superior worth they deserve to be given to Brāhmaṇas of superior worth and not to ordinary Brāhmaṇas. So I myself send to you Brāhmaṇas whose worth I know full well.'

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER—I obey your commands, Revered Sir ! Exit.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo Sāringarava ! Say to Viśvāvasu and his two brothers in my name that they should go to receive gifts of ornaments from the Vrishala and then see me (on their way back).

PUPIL—I do as you bid me, Revered Sir ! Exit.

CHĀNAKYA—This is an item to be mentioned at the close. But the body of the letter, how is it to be drawn up ? Musing a while. Ha ! I have it. I learn from spies that from among the Mlechchha chiefs assembled the following five, that are the foremost, follow the lead of Rākshasa with whom they are on the most intimate terms : —

Chitravarman of Kulūta, Simhanāda the lion king of Malyadeśa, Pushkarāksha of Kaśmīra, Sushena king of Sindhudeśa who has humbled his enemies, and Meghāksha the lord of the Pārasikas who has a vast cavalry, that is the fifth. Surely I may enter their names here. Chitragupta may henceforth strike them off.

Hallo Sāringarava !

PUPIL—entering—What is your command, Revered Sir !

CHĀNAKYA—My dear boy ! The writing of Vedic scholars lacks ease and grace. Say, therefore, to Siddhārthaka in my name that he should get a letter written by Śakaṭadāsa in these terms ; He whispers them into his ears ; and see me. It is to bear no address on the outer side, for he himself is to be employed by a certain person to carry some oral message to a certain person (with the said letter). He should not tell Śakatadāsa that it is Chāṇakya who causes the letter to be written.

PUPIL—I do as you bid me, Revered Sir !

Exit.

CHĀNAKYA—How glad I am ! I gain a victory over Malayaketu. SIDDHĀRTHAKA, entering, letter in hand—Victory to you, Noble Sir ! Here is the letter in Śakatadāsa's handwriting.

CHĀNAKYA—What a beautiful hand ! Going over the contents mentally. Stamp the letter, good man, with this signet ring.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—I carry out your order, Revered Sir ! He stamps it.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo Sāringarava !

PUPIL, entering—What is your command, Revered Sir !

CHĀNAKYA—Say to Kālapāśika, the head of the metropolitan police, in my name that it is the command of the Vrishala that the Bauddha monk named Jīvasiddhi who murdered king Parvata by means of the poison-maid employed by Rākshasa, should, after a public proclamation of the said offence, be banished from the capital with disgrace.

PUPIL—I obey, Revered Sir ! He sets forth.

CHĀNAKYA—Hold, my boy ! Tell him further that the other offender penman Śakatadāsa by name, who has been always hatching treason against His Majesty's person, should, after a public proclamation of the offence, be also impaled and his family should be put into prison.

PUPIL—I do as you bid me, Revered Sir !

Exit.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Noble Sir ! The letter is stamped with the seal. What is to be done next ?

CHĀNAKYA—Go directly to the place of execution armed with a sword and frighten the executioners (out of their wits); and when they run away terrified in any and every direction, carry off Śakatadāsa from the place of execution and take him (safe) to Rākshasa. Rejoicing at the rescue of his friend he will reward you, (richly). You should take the reward and thenceforth be employed for some time as a personal servant of Rākshasa. Afterwards when the enemies are near, this is the purpose which you have to achieve. He whispers it into his ear. That is all.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—I shall do as you command me, Revered Sir.

CHĀNAKYA, anxiously to himself—Would that wicked Rākshasa be caught (after all this) !

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Caught outright, Noble Sir,

CHĀNAKYA, to himself, rejoicing—Ah ! Rākshasa caught outright.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—is the errand of the Revered One. So may I go for the success of my mission ?

CHĀNAKYA—Go, good man, and prosper.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—May it be as you wish !

Exit.

PUPIL, entering—Revered Sir ! Kālapāśika, the head of the metropolitan police, requests the Revered Preceptor that he will at once put His Majesty Chandragupta's command into execution.

CHĀNAKYA—All right. Now, my boy, I wish to see Chandanadāsa, the head of the guild of pearl-merchants.

PUPIL—I bow to your wish, Revered Sir. Going out and returning with Chandanadāsa. Come this way, head pearl-merchant !

CHANDANADĀSA, to himself—

Even an innocent person is filled with apprehension when summoned by ruthless Chānakya. Then what to say of one in guilt ?

20

Hence it was that I said to the three Bauddha laymen Dhanasena and others who live in our ward:—‘ Per chance cursed Chānakya may order my house to be searched. So remove the family of our Noble Minister Rākshasa. As for me, come what may ’.

PUPIL—Come on, head pearl-merchant !

CHANDANADĀSA—I follow you, good sir !

PUPIL, making up to Chānakya—Revered Sir ! Here is Chandanadāsa, the head of the guild of pearl-merchants.

CHANDANADĀSA—Victory to you, noble sir !

CHĀNAKYA, looking at him—Welcome, head pearl-merchant ! Take this seat.

CHANDANADĀSA, with a low bow—Undue honour grieves the heart more than dishonour. You know it, Noble Sir ! So I sit here on the ground as becomes me.

CHĀNAKYA—O, do not say so, my good sir ! This is certainly your due in company of persons like us. So do take the said seat.

CHANDANADĀSA, to himself—The villain insinuates something. Aloud I obey your order, Noble sir ! He takes the seat pointed out.

CHĀNAKYA—I hope, pearl-merchant, you are doing good business.

CHANDANADĀSA—By your favour, Noble Sir, my affairs are prospering.

CHĀNAKYA—Do the shortcomings of Chandragupta cause the subjects to remember the excellencies of the late kings?

CHANDANADĀSA, stopping his ears—I deprecate the sinful thought.

To be sure the subjects are immensely pleased with His Majesty, the esteemed Chandragupta, as with the moon rising in full splendour on an autumnal full-moon night. 27

CHĀNAKYA—If it be so, kings look for gratification in return, good sir, from their gratified subjects.

CHANDANADĀSA—Command me, Noble Sir, how much is expected of this person.

CHĀNAKYA—Good man! This is the regime of Chandragupta, not of Nanda! Monetary gift would have satisfied the greedy king Nanda; but to Chandragupta it is only the abstention from severity that is gratifying.

CHANDANADĀSA—I am thankful to you, Noble Sir, for this.

CHĀNAKYA—And you would ask us how the abstention from severity that is secured (lit. results).

CHANDANADĀSA—I wish to be directed by you, Noble Sir, in the matter.

CHĀNAKYA—To speak briefly, by loyalty.

CHANDANADĀSA—Noble sir! Which hapless person would have himself deemed disloyal by the Noble One?

CHĀNAKYA—You yourself, to begin with.

CHANDANADĀSA, stopping his ears—I deprecate the sinful thought. And what hostility can straws bear to fire?

CHĀNAKYA—Here it is. You shelter the family of Rākshasa who is inimical to the king.

CHANDANADĀSA—It is false, noble Sir! Some vile fellow might have told it to you.

CHĀNAKYA—Have no misgiving, good man! Officers of former kings fly to other countries in panic, leaving their families in the houses of citizens without (previously) consulting their wishes. It is simply the concealment of the fact that is criminal.

CHANDANADĀSA—Just so. In the panic referred to, the family of Minister Rākshasa was in my house.

CHĀNAKYA—First you said ‘It is false’; and now you say ‘It was (in my house)’. These are conflicting statements.

CHANDANADĀSA—Noble Sir, I misunderstood you and blundered.

CHĀNAKYA—King Chandragupta would have no tricks (of the sort). So deliver the family of Rākshasa into our hands, good sir, and exculpate yourself from the charge (of treason).

CHANDANADĀSA—Pray, Noble Sir, I humbly say that in the panic referred to the family of Minister Rākshasa was in my house.

CHĀNAKYA—And where is it at present ?

CHANDANADĀSA—I do not know.

CHĀNAKYA, with a smile—Ha ! Ha ! you pretend not to know it. Good man ! The danger is imminent and its cure is distant. And don't you think that the Minister Rākshasa will uproot Chandragupta as Vishnugupta Stopping short for a moment with a blush and resuming—uprooted Nanda. Look here.

Even when Nanda and his family lived, sovereign power was very unstable ; and Vakranāsa and other eminent ministers endowed with valour and statemanship failed to make it stable. It is now focussed in Chandragupta, giving delight to all as (does) the light focussed in the moon. Who should endeavour to separate it from him or the moonlight from the moon ? 22
Moreover :—

Who would defy the lion and try to wrench from his mouth, opened, wide in the act of yawning, one of the incisors red with the elephant's blood just tasted and shining like the crescent moon red in the evening twilight ? 23

CHANDANADĀSA, to himself—Verified by deed (lit. result) the vaunt sounds well.

Cries of ' Move aside ' behind the stage.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo, Sārnagarava ! Just see what it is.

PUPIL—I do. Revered Sir ! Going out and returning. Revered Sir ! It is a traitor, Bauddha monk Jīvasiddhi, that is being banished with disgrace by the command of His Majesty Chandragupta.

CHĀNAKYA—A Bauddha monk ? Pity ! All the same, he must bear the consequences of treason. Good Sir ! The king thus punishes traitors severely. Follow then the wholesome advice of a friend, surrender the family of Rākshasa ; and live long to enjoy the manifold favour of the king.

CHANDANADĀSA—The family of Minister Rākshasa is not in my house.

Cries of 'Move aside' repeated behind the stage.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo, Śāringarava ! What is it again ? Just see. PUPIL—I do, Revered Sir ! Going out and returning. It is another traitor, penman Śakatadāsa, that is being taken to the place of execution to be impaled.

CHĀNAKYA—He must bear the consequences of his (evil) deeds. My good Sir ! The king that punishes traitors so severely will show no mercy to you who screen the family of Rākshasa. Do, therefore, save your wife and your life by the surrender of another's wife.

CHANDANADĀSA—Why do you, Noble Sir, seek in vain to frighten me ? I would not give up the family of Minister Rākshasa even if I should have it. What signifies it when I have it not ?

CHĀNAKYA—So you have made up your mind ?

CHANDANADĀSA—Aye, I have.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—Bravo, Chandanadāsa, you deserve all praise.

Which person in the present age would do this, which is impossible except in the case of Śibi, inspite of the advantages to be easily got by betraying others ?

Aloud in rage—O thou wicked wretch of a trader ! Be then prepared to bear the brunt of royal displeasure.

CHANDANADĀSA—I am prepared. You may, Noble Sir, do what your high office empowers you to do.

CHĀNAKYA—Hallo, Śāringarava ! Tell Kālapāśika, the head of the metropolitan police,—‘Let this wretched trader be at once’—No, not so. Tell Vijayapāla the governor of the castle to seize his property, put him in chains and keep him in the gaol with his wife and his son till I report to the Vrishala, who himself will order the execution of one and all in his case.

PUPIL—I do as you bid me, Revered Sir ! Come away, head peral-merchant !

CHANDANADĀSA, rising from his seat—I follow you, good sir ! to himself—I bless my stars that I die for my friends' sake and for no human fault of mine.

Exeunt Śāringarava and Chandanadāsa.

CHĀNAKYA, with joy—Ha ! Rākshasa is now secured.

Since this pearl-merchant parts with his life as a thing uncared for in his day of trouble, he too will surely not hold his life dear in the pearl-merchant's day of trouble. 25

Noise behind the stage.

PUPIL, entering hurriedly—Revered Sir ! That fellow Siddhārthaka escaped taking away from the place of execution Śakatādāsa who was about to be impaled.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—Well done, Siddhārthaka ! You have begun in right earnest. Aloud. What ? Escaped ! My boy, tell Bhāgurāyana to overtake him at once.

PUPIL, going out and returning—Alas ! Bhāgurāyana also has made off.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—Go he may and achieve success. Aloud. My boy ! Tell Bhadrabhaṭa, Purudatta, Diṅgarāta, Balagupta, Rājasena, Rohitāksha and Vijayavarman to track and capture both of them.

PUPIL—All right. Going out and returning, in distress—Alas ! The administrative organization is wholly disorganized. What a sorry plight ! Bhadrabhaṭa and his associates are gone ! They left early before the day dawned.

CHĀNAKYA, to himself—May they fare well ! Aloud. My boy, don't you feel distressed. (It matters little).

Those that lately left for reasons known to them, are gone already. Let those who remain, also prepare to leave me agreeably to their wishes. Only my talent must not forsake me. In the accomplishment of political purposes that single faculty is more than a match for hundreds of armies. The magnitude of its powers has been amply proved by the destruction of the Nandas. 26

Rising from his seat—Here I go and arrange to bring back Bhadrabhaṭa and his associates. Fixing his gaze in the air, to himself. O Rākshasa of wicked resolve ! Where will you go now ? I shall, before long—

Secure you by my talents and employ you in the service of Chandragupta,—you who roam at large by yourself swollen with the pride of personal prowess, self-willed and haughty and endowed with means to lure men by ample gifts, just as a person by his talents captures and employs in service a wild elephant that roams at large by himself, swollen with the pride of personal strength, self-willed and haughty and endowed with means to lure bees by ample ichoral exudation.

END OF ACT I
called
THE SIGNET FOUND.

ACT II
THE SALE OF ORNAMENTS.

There enters a snake-charmer.

SNAKE-CHARMER—

Those who are ever mindful of preserving the secrecy of spells, know the application of antidotes and accurately mark the magic ring, (can) deal with snakes; just as those who are ever mindful of preserving the secrecy of political schemes, know the science of internal polity and accurately mark the zone of friendly, hostile and neutral princes, deal with kings. 1

Looking up—What do you say, Sir? You ask me who I am. Sir,
I am a snake-charmer by name Jīrṇavisha. What say you further?
You are fond of snake-sport. Well, Sir, what is your occupation?
You are an officer of the king's household. In that case, sir, you indeed sport with snakes.

For an officer of the King's household flushed with success, as also an elephant driver beside himself with liquor and a snake charmer ill-acquainted with spells and antidotal herbs, alike perish. 2

Ah me! He is gone. Looking up again. What do you say, Sir? You ask me what there is in the wickerboxes. There are snakes that give me a living. What say you further? You wish to see snake-sport (lit. snakes). This is not a place for it, Sir, pardon me. If you have a curiosity for snake-sport, come, I shall exhibit it in the house yonder.
What do you say? It is the residence of the mighty Minister Rākshasa. People like you have no access there, you say. Then you may go your way, Sir ! My vocation blesses me, giving access to me there. Oh ! He goes away.

To himself. How strange is this ! When I look at Chandragupta guided by the counsels of Chānakya, I feel the attempts of Rākshasa to be all but abortive ; and when I turn my gaze to Malayaketu guided by the counsels of Rākshasa, I regard Chandragupta to be all but dispossessed of the throne. For,

The sovereignty of the Maurya King appears unshakable to me, secured by the cords of the talents of Kautilya. At the same time I see it on the point of being wrested from him by Rākshasa with the arms of statesmanly tactics. 3

So in this contest of the two talented eminent Ministers the Goddess of Sovereignty seems to be in a state of suspense.

In this land the timorous Goddess, in a state of suspense, is, methinks, in all likelihood greatly troubled by oscillating between the two warring Prime Ministers, as is a timorous she-elephant in a vast forest between two warring wild elephants. 4

Now I shall go and see His Excellency Rākshasa.

He goes and waits at the door. Then enters Rākshasa, sitting in a thoughtful mood with an attendant in waiting.

Rākshasa, with a sigh—Alas ! How sad it is !

Wakeful by day and by night, with a mind wholly and restlessly cogitating on state-affairs, I have thought out this design ; but there is no canvas (lit. wall) to fix it on, now that the big family of the Nandas, like that of the Yādavas, has been destroyed by cruel Fate—, of the Nandas, who, like the Yādavas, had put down their enemies by their valour and statecraft. 5

No, no, I should not say so.

I closely and intently apply myself (lit. my mind) to politics, accepting the servitude of a stranger, not forgetting my (debt of) loyalty, not losing myself in the enjoyment of sensuous pleasures, not fearing the loss of my life, nor seeking personal greatness, in order that my Sovereign even after his translation to the other world, might have the satisfaction to see his enemy done (on earth) to death. 6

Looking up in the air. Goddess of Sovereignty ! You have no appreciation of merit, none at all. Otherwise,

Why, should you, O Fickle One, have attached yourself to that inimical Mauryan brat, forsaking King Nanda, the delight of all, and not perished with him, as does the streak of ichoral exudation with a scented elephant ? Tell me. 7

And, O Ignoble One—

Are kings born of illustrious families, all dead (lit. consigned to funeral pyres) on earth, that you chose the base-born, and wicked Maurya for your husband ? Perhaps the mind (lit. sense) of women, which is by nature as unsteady as the tip of the blossoms of the Kāśa plant, is averse to the recognition of a man's merits. 8

So I shall slay the very person to whom, O Wanton One, you have attached yourself, and destroy your hopes. Reflecting. Accordingly (1) I have taken the apporopriate step of leaving my family in the house of my bosom-friend Chandanadāsa when I quitted the town (of Pāṭaliputra). For, the adherents of King Nanda there that co-operate with us in this cause, will not be remiss in their endeavours, owing to the assurance that I am not indifferent in the matter of the attack on Pāṭaliputra. (2) I have also stationed Śakatādāsa there with vast funds to keep the assassins, poisoners, and other secret agents employed in the murder of Chandragupta, attached to us and to seduce the malcontents on the enemy's side there. (3) I have, moreover, employed Jīvasiddhi and other friends to gather information about the enemy every instant and to break up their alliance. To be brief

I shall very soon pierce with the dart of intelligence the very vitals of him by whom, as by a tiger's cub, brought up with tenderness, perished king Nanda so loving unto his children, and with him his whole family, provided intolerant Fate protects him not serving as a coat of mail. 9

Then enters the Chamberlain of Malayaketu

CHAMBERLAIN—Old age has eradicated passion and gradually implanted piety in me, just as the policy of Chāṇakya has smashed king Nanda and established Chandragupta in Pāṭaliputra. It is growing in strength as is the Maurya king. Nevertheless avarice tries persistently (lit. long) to uproot (lit. conquer) piety, just as Rākshasa tries to uproot Chandragupta, being afforded a footing by service; but does not succeed. 10

Advancing further. Here is the Minister Rākshasa. Making up to him. Prosperity to you.

RĀKSHASA—Venerable Jājali ! I bow to you. Priyānvadaka, a seat for the worthy officer.

PRIYĀMVADAKA—Here it is. Pray, take the seat, Worthy Sir ! CHAMBERLAIN, taking his seat:—His Majesty Prince Malayaketu says courteously to the Minister. “ My heart is grieved that the Noble One has been abjuring personal decoration befitting his (high) position since a long time. Though it is impossible to forget the many excellent qualities of the (late) King Nanda, it behoves the Noble One to grant my request, exhibiting an ornament—and put on this ornament which I take off from my person and send to him.”

RĀKSHASA—Venerable Jājali ! Tell His Majesty respectfully in my name that the memory of the good qualities of my late master has already been obliterated by (the impress of) partiality for His Majesty’s excellent qualities on my mind. But

As long as the enemies are not destroyed to a man and the golden throne of His Majesty who is the best of men on earth, is not set up in the Sugānga palace, I will not wear the slightest ornament on these limbs of mine that have abjectly suffered humiliation at the hands of the foes.

CHAMBERLAIN—Under the Minister’s lead His Majesty perceives every thing within easy reach. Do, therefore, accede to the Prince’s request which is the first of its kind.

RĀKSHASA—Venerable Sir ! Your word is as much inviolable as the Prince’s. So I have but to conform to His Majesty’s order.

CHAMBERLAIN, decorating Rākshasa with the ornament—God bless you. I depart.

RĀKSHASA—I bow to you, Venerable Jājali !

Exit Chamberlain.

RĀKSHASA—Priyānvadaka, see if there be any one at the door wanting to see me.

PRIYĀMVADAKA—I obey. Proceeding to the door and noticing the snake-charmer—Well, sir, who are you ?

SNAKE-CHARMER—Good man ! I am a snake-charmer. I wish to exhibit snakesports before the Minister.

PRIYĀMVADAKA—Wait till I report to the Minister. Returning to Rākshasa—Please Your Excellency, there is a snake-charmer wishing to exhibit snake-sports before the Minister.

RĀKSHASA, noticing the throbbing of the left eye, to himself—O ! the inauspicious sight of snakes ! Aloud. Priyānvadaka, I have no curiosity to see snake-sports. So give something to gratify him and dismiss him.

PRIYAMVADAKA—I do as Your Excellency bids me. Making for the snake-charmer. Hallo ! His Excellency the Minister favours you not with an interview, but with the fruit of it.

SNAKE-CHARMER—Gentle Sir ! Respectfully say to the Minister on my behalf, that I am not merely a snake-charmer. I am also a Prākrit poet. So if the Minister does not favour me with an interview, His Excellency will be pleased to read this stanza (lit. leaf). PRIYAMVADAKA, taking the leaflet and returning to Rākshasa—Respected Sir ! The snake-charmer there respectfully says that he is not merely a snake-charmer. He is also a Prākrit poet. So if the Minister does not favour him with an interview, Your Excellency would be pleased to read this stanza (leaf).

RĀKSHASA, takes the leaflet and reads—

The honey which the bee gives having by its skill sucked completely the flower juice, serves the purpose of others. 12
After a moment's reflection to himself. Ha ! The verse purports to say that there is (come) my spy fetching (lit. knowing) news from Kusumapura, (the Flower city). Now my mind has been so much distracted by affairs of state (lit. work), and there is such a large number of secret agents that I forget him. Oh, I now remember him. Verily he must be Virādhagupta in the guise of a snake-charmer. Aloud. Priyamvadaka, show him in. He is an excellent poet. I should hear his elegant verses.

PRIYAMVADAKA—I obey. Returning to the snake-charmer—Come in, good Sir !

SNAKE-CHARMER, advancing and looking intently, to himself—Here is His Excellency Rākshasa—

Apprehensive of his activities, the Goddess of Sovereignty looking about (timorously) with her creeper-like left arm thrown loosely around the neck of the Maurya, and with her right arm, dropping down on the lap as often as set perforse on his shoulder, does not yet repose her right breast on the chest of Chandragupta in a way to press hard the nipple in the contact of a close embrace. 13

Approaching—Victory to Your Excelleney.

RĀKSHASA, seeing him—O Virādha— ! Checking himself midway, mindful of something. Priyamvadaka, I will have snake-sports now. So the attendants may retire. You too may go about your work.

PRIYAMVADAKA—I do as Your Excellency bids me.

Exit Priyamvadaka with attendants.

RĀKSHASA—Dear Virādhagupta ! Take this seat.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—I do as you direct me. He sits down.

RĀKSHASA, eying him closely, with a sigh—Alas ! That this should be the plight of my (late) Master's dependants.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Away with the lament. Your Excellency is to restore us ere long to our former grandeur (lit. position).

RĀKSHASA—Now tell me my friend, the story of Kusumapura.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Please Your Excellency, the story of Kusumapura is long. Where shall I begin ?

RĀKSHASA—My friend ! Just begin the account from the state entry of Chandragupta in the palace of Nanda. I wish to hear the achievements of the assassins, poisoners, and other secret agents employed by us.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Here do I narrate them. The forces of Chandragupta and Parvatesvara, composed of Sākas, Yavanas, Kiratas, Kambojas, Pārasikas Balhikas and others led by the counsels of Chāṇakya, looking like seas with waters in commotion at the time of universal destruction, invest Kusumapura on all sides.

RĀKSHASA, At once drawing his sword—Ah ! who is there to invade Kusumapura, while I am alive.

Let archers patrol the wall all round with a brisk pace; let elephants, strong enough to break the array of hostile elephants be stationed at the gates; and let those who, desirous of fame, wish to have a hit at the feeble forces of the enemy, sally forth with me, single-minded and fearless of death. 14

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Your Excellency would spare this outburst. It is the past that I am describing.

RĀKSHASA, with a sigh—Oh ! It is the past ! I thought it was the (living) present. Dropping the sword in the sheath, with tears in his eyes.

Lord Sarvarthasiddhi ! Rakshasa (still) remembers the great favor of Your Majesty and it makes him sad.

In your (heated) imagination you saw Rākshasa multiplied a thousand-fold as it were in the city, and through your high regard sent orders upon orders in battle to me commanding me in these words. " Let Rākshasa hasten to the spot which this body of elephants black like rainclouds is attacking. Let Rākshasa repel the charge of this troop of horses rushing like tides (lit. bounding like rolling waters). Let Rākshasa make a short work of that corps of foot soldiers. " 15

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—His Majesty Sarvarthasiddhi perceived it. He could not bear to see the citizens undergoing the severe hardship of the siege day after day. Under the circumstances he repaired to the underground passage and retired to the penance forest for the sake of the citizens. In the absece of His Majesty, your forces grew slack in enterprise ; you, thereupon, left the city by the underground passage for the purpose of restoring the Nanda power, having (previously) ascertained (the faith of) the citizens from such daring deeds as obstructing the proclamation of Chandragupta's victory. Thereafter poor Parvataka met his death at the hands of the poison maid retained by you to kill Chandragupta.

RĀKSHASA—Look (here), friend, at the strange course of events.

The dangerous (lit. powerful) poison-maid, claiming a single victim, that I had kept to slay Chandragupta, reaching Parvatesvara, simply killed him whom wicked Vishṇugupta wanted to kill, just as the dangerous magic missile Śakti, claiming a single victim, that Karna had kept to slay Arjuna, reaching Ghatoṭkacha, simply killed him whom Krishna wanted to kill, to his very great delight. 16

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—It was a wilful perverseness of Fate. What could the Minister do ?

RĀKSHASA—Proceed.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Frightened away by the murder of his father, Prince Malayaketu fled (for his life). Then Variodhaka, brother to Parvatesvara, was assured of good faith (by Chāṇakya). And Chandragupta's entry in the palace of Nanda was publicly notified. Chāṇakya (on the day of the entry) summoned all the carpenters residing in Kusumapura and thus addressed them. ' There is to be the entry of Chandragupta in the palace of Nanda at midnight today as appointed by astrologers. You will, therefore, decorate the royal palace commencing with the main entrance. ' Then the carpenters respectfully said that, anticipating the entry of His Majesty Chandragupta in the palace of Nanda, carpenter Dāruvarman had already furnished the main entrance with magnificent (lit. special) decorations such as, the golden arch and the like ; so that the interior only remained to be decorated by them. Then the fellow Chānakya bestowed a long eulogium on Dāruvarman's wisdom, expressing gratification at his having decorated the royal palace without being told, and added that he would have his reward for it before long.

RAKSHASA, with concern—Tut, speak not of the gratification of the fellow Chānakya. Not waiting till he was ordered to do it, owing to excessive loyal zeal or stupid blundering, Dāruvarman must have aroused strong suspicion in his mind so that his attempt (on the life of Chandragupta), I fear, must have failed or miscarried.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Then at the auspicious moment in the middle of the night that cursed Chānakya placed Vairodhaka, the brother of Parvatesvara, on the same throne with Chandragupta and divided the empire between them.

RAKSHASA—What do you say ? Did he, in truth, give to Vairodhaka, the brother of Parvatesvara, half the empire as promised previously by him ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Yes, he did.

RAKSHASA, to himself—Surely, that very cunning fellow Chānakya, must have made this public demonstration to wipe away the infamy of (lit. caused by) the murder of Parvatesvara, having in view some secret way of murdering the poor fellow. Aloud, Well, what then ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Then just at the time announced beforehand, of the entry of Chandragupta in the palace of Nanda at midnight, Vairodhaka, who had taken the bath, wrapped his person in a silken robe (of state) wrought all over with strings of pearls, put on a jewelled crown which at the same time held together and adorned his hair, and decked his broad chest with garlands of sweet smelling flowers worn crosswise. So his features were not recognisable even by those who knew him intimately. He mounted agreeably to the orders of wicked Chānakya, the female elephant Chandralekhā, that Chandragupta used to ride ; and, accompanied by the princes that followed in the train of Chandragupta, he got to the entrance of the palace of Nanda. Then the carpenter Dāruvarman, your secret agent, taking Vairodhaka for Chandragupta, contrived to drop down on him the arch with mechanical contrivance. At that moment the Mauryan attendant princes reined in their steeds out-side the palace. Now, Barbaraka, the driver of Chandralakhū, another secret agent of yours, seized with his hand the golden staff hanging by a golden chain with a desire to draw the knife that was inside the staff.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—The effort of both was equally misdirected.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—So the female elephant apprehending a blow on the hind parts, all of a sudden changed her gait. Then the arch with mechanical contrivance dropped by Dāruvarman, counting on the previous (forward) motion, fell wide of the mark and crushed to death Barbaraka, before he could reach Vairodhaka, mistaken for Chandragupta, with the drawn knife in his hand (lit., with which his hand was busy). At that instant Dāruvarman, who had been there, while sitting on the lofty stage supporting the arch, expecting certain death for dropping down the arch with mechanical contrivance, killed poor Vairodhaka mounted on the female elephant there and then with the iron bolt that had formed the key of the mechanism (of the arch).

RĀKSHASA—Alas ! two undesirable things have happened. Vairodhaka and Barbaraka are killed, as Fate would have it, and Chandragupta is uninjured. Well, what became of the carpenter Dāruvarman ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He was stoned to death by the Mauryan foot-soldiers who marched in front of Vairodhaka.

RĀKSHASA, with tears in his eyes—Alas ! I have lost a loving friend in Dāruvarman ! Well, what did that physician of ours, Abhayadatta do ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He did every thing (expected of him.)

RĀKSHASA, joyfully—Well, then, is Chandragupta killed ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—No, Minister ! He is not killed, as Fate would have it.

RĀKSHASA, sadly—Why do you then say that he did every thing (expected of him.)

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He prepared a draught for Chandragupta which was mixed with a pulvarised drug causing secret death. Chāṇakya examined it, and found that it changed colour in the golden bowl. So he said to Chandragupta :—“ Vrishala ! there is poison in the draught. Don’t you drink it.”

RĀKSHASA—Surely, the fellow is very shrewd ; well, what became of the physician ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He was made to drink that draught. So he died.
RĀKSHASA, with a sigh—Alas ! an erudite Doctor of Medicine is lost (lit. is dead). Well, then, how did Pramodaka—the officer of the sleeping palace—fare ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He shared the fate of others.

RĀKSHASA, sadly—How so.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—The fool lived extravagently (lit. at great expense) with the large sum of money which you gave him; and, when questioned as to how he came by so much wealth, he made contradictory statements: whereupon Chānakya put him to death by torture.

RĀKSHASA, sadly—How sad ! Here too, Fate has thwarted us. Well, what is the news of Bībhatsaka and his associates employed by us to murder Chandragupta in bed, who dwelt in the interior of the wall of the sleeping mansion, having got in there by the underground passage ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—It is terrible.

RĀKSHASA with a feeling of uneasiness—Could it be that their presence there was discovered ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—So it was. Prior to the entry of Chandragupta, wicked Chānakya visited the sleeping mansion which he no sooner entered than, as he closely inspected it, he observed a line of ants issuing from a hole in the wall with particles of boiled rice. Hence, he concluded that there were men hidden inside the sleeping mansion ; and he ordered it to be set fire to. When it was on fire Bībhatsaka and his associates blinded by smoke, could not find the passage door which they had previously secured (from within) and so they all perished in the flames.

RĀKSHASA, with tears in his eyes—Behold the good luck, friend, of wicked Chandragupta.

The poison-maid whom I secretly employed to kill him, by (the perversity of) Fate, caused the death of Parvataka who was to claim half the kingdom ; and those whom I engaged to kill him with deadly weapons and poisons, have themselves been killed by those persons. My schemes do but bring manifold good unto that Maurya himself.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Nevertheless, look here, Your Excellency, what is undertaken can by no means be given up.

The vulgar do not, indeed, undertake a thing for fear of obstacles ; the midling undertake a thing and give it up, overcome by obstructions ; but noble persons do not give up what they undertake though again and again obstructed by difficulties. 18 RĀKSHASA—Certainly, what is undertaken, cannot be given up. It is evident in your own instance. Well proceed.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Since then Chāṇakaya grew a thousand-fold more vigilant in the matter of the safety of Chandragupta and ferreting out that such a thing must be the doing of such a person, he punished your trusted friends residing in Kusumapura (one after another).

RĀKSHASA in anxious suspense—And who were the persons that were punished.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—To begin with, the Bauddha monk Jīvasiddhi was banished with disgrace from the capital.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—So far as he is concerned, it is bearable. Banishment is not painful to one without a family or property.

Aloud. On what charge, friend, was he banished ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—On the charge that he murdered Parvateśvara with the poison-maid retained by you.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—Kautilya, you deserve much praise for your policy—who sow but a single seed and reap many fruits. Thus you have removed the stain on your character, cast it on us and got rid of the claimant of half the kingdom.

Aloud—Proceed further.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Then Śakatadāsa was ordered to be impaled on the charge that he had employed Dāruvarman and others to murder Chandragupta. It was proclaimed throughout the town.

RĀKSHASA, with tears in his eyes—Ah ! Friend Śakatadāsa, you did not deserve such a (sad) death. But, no, you died in your master's cause and are not to be deplored. It is we that cling to life even after the destruction of the Nandas, who are to be deplored.

VIRADHAGUPTA—Don't say so. There is the Master's cause to be served—

RĀKSHASA—Friend—

Holding fast, not to that object, but to a desire to live, we ungratefully do not follow our sovereign gone to the other world !

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—

Holding fast to that object, and not to a desire to live, you gratefully do not follow our sovereign gone to the other world

21

RĀKSHASA— Speak on, Friend ! I am prepared to hear another such disaster to a friend.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Coming to know of it, Chandanadāsa had your family (safely) removed.

RĀKSHASA—It was improper. For he did what was hostile to the wicked fellow Chāṇakya.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Surely it is still more improper to play false to a friend.

RĀKSHASA—Well, proceed with the account.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—He was pressed to deliver your family which he did not do. Then the fellow Chāṇakya flew into rage and—

RĀKSHASA, with alarm—put him to death ! Is it so ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—No, no. He ordered his property to be seized, put him in chains and sent him to prison with his wife and son.

RĀKSHASA—Then, why do you say with (an air of) gratification that he had my family safely removed ? You had rather say that I in person am put in chains with my son and wife.

PRIYAMVADAKA, pushing aside the curtain and entering—Victory to Your Excellency ; there is Śakatadāsa at the door.

RĀKSHASA—Is it really so ?

PRIYAMVADAKA—The attendants of Your Excellency do not know (what it is) to tell a lie.

RĀKSHASA—Friend Virādhagupta, how is this ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—There is Fate that safe-guards a person.

RĀKSHASA—Priyamvadaka, if it is so, usher him in this very moment and bring me comfort. Why do you delay ?

PRIYAMVADAKA—I do as Your Excellency bids me.

Exit Priyamvadaka.

Then enters Śakatadāsa followed by Siddhārthaka.

ŚAKATADĀSA, to himself—

I saw the stake of impalement firmly planted in the soil, as I did the Maurya ; accepted with bent head (lit. wore) the garland of a felon to be executed which smote my consciousness, as I did his rule (lit. sovereignty) ; and heard the music of the drums of execution terribly grating on the ear, as I did the overthrow of the sovereign. Still my heart did not break, hardened, methinks, by the (thrice) previous strokes of misfortune. 2

With joy on seeing Rākshasa. Here is Minister Rākshasa.

Upholding the cause of king Nanda with undying devotion even after his death, he stands at the highest mark (of eminence) among the faithful on earth. 23

Making up to him—Victory to the Minister.

RĀKSHASA, with joy on seeing him—Friend Śakatadāsa, by good luck I see you that had been in the clutches of Kautilya. Do therefore embrace me.

Śakatadāsa embraces him.

RĀKSHASA, after a long embrace—Sit you down here.

ŚAKATADĀSA—I do. He sits down.

RĀKSHASA—Friend Śakatadāsa ! who is the author of this joy to my heart ?

ŚAKATADĀSA, pointing to Siddhārthaka—This dear friend Siddhārthaka—he it was that rescued me from the place of execution putting to flight the executioners.

RĀKSHASA, with joy—Gentle Siddhārthaka, this is admittedly an inadequate reward of the good you have done. Do, however, accept it. So saying he takes off the ornament on his person and presents it to Siddhārthaka.

SIDDHĀRTAKA, taking it and falling down at his feet—Please Your Excellency, I am a new-comer. So I have no acquaintance here with whom I may leave this gift of the Minister and feel secure. I therefore wish to keep it in the Minister's treasury (in a casket), stamped with this signet ring. I shall take it when I want it.

RĀKSHASA—All right. There is no objection. Śakatadāsa, do as he says.

ŚAKATADĀSA—As the Minister commands. Aside to Rākshasa on seeing the signet ring. The ring has the Minister's name engraved.

RĀKSHASA, observing it, to himself—Too true. It is the very ring that my Brāhmaṇa wife took off my finger (lit. hand) to comfort her (i. c. to soothe her anxiety). How did it reach this man's hand ? Aloud. Gentle Siddhārthaka ! Whence did you get this ring ?

SIDDHĀRTAKA—Please Your Excellency—there is the head peah-merchant, Chandanadāsa by name, in Kusumapura. It lay at the entrance of his house. I found it there.

RĀKSHASA—That is likely.

SIDDHĀRTAKA—What is likely there, Your Excellency ?

RĀKSHASA—(I mean) The find of such an article lying at the entrance of the mansions of very rich persons.

ŚAKATADĀSA—Dear Siddhārthaka ! It is the Minister's signet ring. Give it to him.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Noble friend ! I would esteem it a favour that His Excellency should accept this ring. He hands over the ring.

RĀKSHASA—Dear Śakatadāsa ! You may make use of this very ring in matters official.

ŚAKATADĀSA—As the Minister bids me.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Please Your Excellency, I have a request to make. RĀKSHASA—Speak out, good man, unreservedly.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Your Excellency will certainly see that I can not return to Pāṭaliputra, having given offence to the fellow Chāṇakya. I therefore crave to be taken up in your service.

RĀKSHASA—Good man ! It is gratifying to me. We hesitated to invite you to do so only because we did not know your mind (lit. intention). You may enter our service.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—I am thankful for the favour.

RĀKSHASA—Dear Śakatadāsa ! Give rest and refreshment to Siddhārthaka.

ŚAKATADĀSA—I do as you bid me forthwith.

Exit Śakatadāsa with Siddhārthaka.

RĀKSHASA—Dear Virādhagupta ! Finish your account. Do the members of the body politic bear our tactics of causing disunion ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—Oh yes, they do. Surely it is well known—

RĀKSHASA—What is well known, friend ?

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—that Chandragupta is angry with Chāṇakya at the escape of Malayaketu. And Chāṇakya, elated with success, vexes him (further) by repeated contravention of his orders. This I say from personal knowledge.

RĀKSHASA, delighted to hear it—Dear Virādhagupta ! Go back to Kusumapura in this very guise of a snake-charmer. There I have a friend named Stavakalaśa living in the guise of a bard. You shall tell him in my name that whenever Chāṇakya acts contrary to the orders of Chandragupta, he shall incite the latter with inflammatory verses and communicate the result very secretly by the mouth of Karabhaka.

VIRĀDHAGUPTA—I obey Your Excellency's yrders.

Exit Virādhagupta.

PRIYAMVADAKA, entering—Victory to Your Excellency. Śakatadāsa respectfully states that these three ornaments of superior quality are for sale. Your Excellency will examine them.

RAKSHASA, to himself, examining them—these are ornaments of very great value. Aloof. Good man ! Tell Śakatadāsa to satisfy the seller and buy them.

PRIYAMVADAKA—I obey.

[Exit.

RAKSHASA—I too, must depute Karabhaka to Kusumapura. Rising from his seat. I wish I could break the fellowship of Chandragupta and wicked Chāṇakya. Or why ?

Having imposed his mandate on all chieftains, the Maurya is shining with super-spiritedness ; and deeming that it is his support that has made the Maurya a king, Chāṇakya is filled with arrogance. One has, by the acquisition of a kingdom, gained his object. The other has crossed the ocean of his vow. The very consciousness of the ends achieved, joined to the failings (noticed), shall certainly make them part friendship.

Exit Rākshasa.

END OF ACT II
called
The Sale of ornaments.

ACT III

THE FEIGNED QUARREL

There enters the chamberlain of Chandragupta.

CHAMBERLAIN—O Passion of Desire ! You perceived sensuous objects such as (the beauty of) form and others by the eye and other organs of sense and profited thereby. All these are impotent to discharge their functions of cognizing the objects. And the organs of action obeying you (lit. your commands). are greatly losing (active) vigour. Thus has old age asserted itself on you (lit. planted its foot on your head) for certain. In vain, do you pine (for gratification). 1

Moving onwards and looking upwards in the air. O you servants attached to the Sugāṅga Palace ! His Majesty Chandragupta of auspicious name commands that the palace precincts should be furnished with decorations. For, His Majesty wishes to enjoy the sight of Kusumapura celebrating the Kaumudi Festival. Looking upwards in the air again. What do you say to me ? 'The Kaumudi Festival is countermaned. Is His Majesty not aware of it ?' Ill-fated fellows that you are ! What means this talk that will cost you your life.

Let the beauty of gay Chauris shining like a collection of the rays of the Full Moon quickly hang about the columns redolent with the sweet fragrance of incense and decked with garlands; and let the earth, that is, as it were, drooping under the load of the imperial throne that has to be borne incessantly, be instantaneously refreshed by the sprinkling of sandal-scented water and the strewing of flowers. 2

Looking upards in the air again. What do you say to me ? 'We carry out the commands of His Majesty this very instant.' Be quick, good fellows ! His Majesty Chandragupta is coming up there.

This high spirited Prince endeavouring to bear up in early youth the heavy yoke of the empire (lit. earth) that his veteran sire Nanda like a draught animal (lit. an ox trained to bear the yoke) bore for a long time with strong limbs without flinching along rugged paths, neither stumbles nor smarts (lit. feels pain), though in the stage of a bull that is being broken. 3

*Voice behind the stage :—*This way, Your Majesty.

Then enter the King and a female door-keeper.

KING, to himself—To govern a kingdom is, indeed, full (lit. a big source) of discomfort to a conscientious ruler (lit. a king mindful of discharging the duties of a ruler). For—

The protector of the people has to forego his own gratification in gratifying others, as the epithet of the guardian of the earth, void of its proper connotation, is certainly a misnomer (lit. inappropriate, unjustified). If, then, he prefers the gratification of others to his own, he is, alas, a drudge, and how can one that is a drudge of others have a taste of personal gratification ? 4

Moreover, it is really difficult even for good rulers to please Lady Sovereignty.

She hates the stern, forsakes the gentle for fear of outrage, dislikes the illiterate, loves not the profoundly learned, feels shy of the brave and flouts the cowardly. Like a much-courted courtesan Lady Sovereignty is hard to serve. 5

There is, besides, the injunction of the Revered Preceptor that I must pick a feigned quarrel with him and rule independently for some time. I have agreed with much reluctance to do it, which is something like sin. I am, however, always independent with the instructions of the Reverend Preceptor (to boot) to enlighten me (lit. my mind) at all times. For—

As long as the disciple does the right thing here, he never receives a check. It is only when he strays from the (right) path in delusion, that the Preceptor acts as a curb. Hence good persons, loving discipline, are always free (lit. uncurbed). We turn away from all who partake of much freedom (of action) beyond this. 6

Aloud. Venerable Vaihīnari ! Show us the way to the Sugāṅga palace.

CHAMBERLAIN—This way, Your Majesty. Arriving at the palace. Here is the Sugāṅga palace. Ascend it gently, My Lord.

KING, acting the ascent and looking at the quarters—How lovely do the quarters look invested with the beauties of the autumnal season !

Silvered (lit. whitened) with white cloudlets, overspread with flocks of sweet singing swans and crowded with bright asterisms grouped beautifully, the quarters, looking like rivers silvered with sand banks, overspread with flocks of sweet singing swans and crowded with bright lotuses grouped beautifully, gently (lit. slowly) stretch (lit. flow) far away into heavens now by night. 7

Moreover—

Autumn has, as it were, taught propriety to all, having caused the waters of rivers, that had been transgressors, to keep within proper bounds, having imparted lowness to the (stiff) paddy stalks on their being laden with grains and having cured peacocks of the bane of excessive pride. 8

AND—

This rivergoddess Gangā was wearing a dark scowl. She was pining away, because her husband Ocean professed love to many rivergoddesses. But Autumn, like a clever messenger of love, contrives to cause Gangā to resume the proper course, and takes her to her lord. The rivergoddess (now) looks sweet. 9

Surveying the city. How now ? There is no celebration of the Kaumudi Festival in the city. Venerable Vaihinari ! Was the order to celebrate the Kaumudi Festival proclaimed in our name or not ?

CHAMBERLAIN—It was, My Lord.

KING—Well then, is it that the people did not obey our order ?

CHAMBERLAIN, stopping his ears—God forbid the profanity ! Nowhere on earth has Your Majesty's authority been opposed. How could it then be opposed in the Metropolis (lit. by citizens) ?

KING—Then how is it that the Kaumudi Festival is not yet celebrated ?

Courtezans, attended by companions of pleasure well-versed in gallant talk, do not adorn thoroughfares, moving with a gentle pace owing to the imposition of the weight of the heavy (lit. bulky) hind parts; and opulent eminent citizens, accompanied by their wives, do not celebrate the much-loved festival, vying with one another, without misgivings, in their magnificence. 10

CHAMBERLAIN—My Lord. It is—

KING—What is it ?

CHAMBERLAIN—this,—

KING—Speak out in plain terms.

CHAMBERLAIN—the Kaumudi Festival is conteramanded.

KING, angrily—Zounds ! Who did it ?

CHAMBERLAIN—I cannot say further, My Lord.

KING—Can it be that Revered Chāṇakya deprived spectators of this exceedingly lovely spectacle ?

CHAMBERLAIN—Who else, My Lord, that loves life, would set at naught Your Majesty's authority ?

KING—Sonottarā, I would have my seat here.

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER—Here is the seat of state My Lord ! Be pleased to sit there.

KING, taking his seat.—Venerable Vaihīnārī, I want Revered Chānakya.

CHAMBERLAIN—As Your Majesty commands.

Exit.

Then enters Chānakya seated on a mat in his house in a thoughtful and angry mood.

CHĀNAKYA—What? Wicked Rākshasa enters the lists against me!

Resolved that he would wrest the sovereignty from Chandragupta, the Maurya, just as I, Kauṭilya, resenting the wrong done to me like a serpent, left the city, and, having slain Nanda, placed the Viśhala Maurya on the throne, he tries to surpass my superior wisdom.

Fixing his gaze in the air—I say, Rākshasa, desist from this vain endeavour.

The king in the present case is not haughty Nanda, who had his affairs managed by ministers; it is Chandragupta. You, too, are not Chānakya. The only thing common in the enterprise running parallel to mine is enmity to the king, the principal member of the body politic.

12

But I should not much bother myself (lit. my mind) about it. That son of Parvataka there, I well remember, is surrounded by men in my pay who have gained an entrance into (the chambers of) his heart; and Siddharthaka and other secret agents are all intent on the execution of their missions. Now by picking a sham quarrel with Chandragupta the Maurya, I shall bring about a rupture between the enemy Malayaketu and antagonistic Rākshasa who in his own estimation holds himself a master of the tactics of causing rupture.

CHAMBERLAIN, entering—Woe to service!

One has to stand in awe of the king, his ministers, his favourites and other companions of pleasure in the king's household that are in his good graces. Lowering the dignity of a man that meanly toils for food with euphemistic phrases and uplifted eyes, service is rightly regarded by the wise as a canine mode of living.

Proceeding further and reaching Chānakya's house. Here is the dwelling place of Revered Chānakya. Let me in. Entering it and looking about. I wonder at the possessions of the Minister of the king of kings.

Here is a piece of stone to pound cowdung cakes ; here lies a heap of Kuśa grass brought by pupils ; and there the mouldering hut has the (lower) end of the roof bending under the load of sacrificial sticks which are being dried (in the sun). 15

To him His Majesty Chandragupta is simply Vrishala, and rightly so. For—

It is wholly the (powerful) influence of the passion of desire, subject to which even those persons who never tell a lie talk glibly, and ever unwearied, belaud meanly the king for virtues which he does not possess. Otherwise the king is as much an object of disregard as is a straw to those who are free from desire. 16

Seeing Chāṇakya, with a feeling of awe. Here is Revered Chāṇakya. Getting hold of the (whole) world, he has established the reign of Chandragupta there and brought about the end of the reign of Nanda simultaneously, thus surpassing the sun's splendour by his, as the latter has the hold of half (lit. not whole) the globe at a time and establishes there the reign of cold and heat alternately. 17

Bowing with bent knees. Victory to the Revered Preceptor.

CHĀṇAKYA—What brings you into our presence, Vaihīnari ?

CHAMBERLAIN—Revered Sir ! His Majesty Chandragupta whose feet are dyed red by the rubies (lit. gems) in the diadems of princes hastening to pay homage, bows down his head to the Revered Preceptor, and respectfully states that he wishes you should see him, provided your work be not interfered with.

CHĀṇAKYA—The Vrishala wishes that I should see him ! How is that ? Can it be that the countermanding of the Kaumudi Festival by me has reached his ears ?

CHAMBERLAIN—It has, indeed, Revered Sir.

CHĀṇAKYA—flying into rage—Ah ! who told him that ?

CHAMBERLAIN, shaking with fear—I beg your pardon, Revered Sir. His Majesty Chandragupta ascended the Sugānga Palace and from it he noticed in person that the Kaumudi Festival was not celebrated in the city.

CHĀṇAKYA—I see, it was you who then stirred up his feelings and roused his wrath against me. How can it be otherwise ?

Mute with fear the chamberlain looks down.

CHĀNAKYA—Ah ! what (an amount of) spite do the officers of the king's household bear unto Chānakya ? Well, where is the Vrishala ?

CHAMBERLAIN—His Majesty was in the Sugāṅga Palace when he sent me into the Revered Preceptor's presence.

CHĀNAKYA, getting up—Then show me the way to the Sugāṅga Palace.

CHAMBERLAIN—Come this way, Revered Sir !

They go to the Sugāṅga Palace.

CHAMBERLAIN—Here is the Sugāṅga Palace. Ascend it gently, Revered Sir.

CHĀNAKYA, acting the ascent and seeing Chandragupta—Ah ! There sits the Vrishala on the throne. Good.

The throne is rid of defaulting Nandas. It is occupied by the Vrishala, the best of kings. And it is graced by a worthy occupant (lit. ruler). The three good results give me triple gratification. 18

Making up to Chandragupta. Victory to the Vrishala.

KING, rising from the throne—Here does Chandragupta throw himself at the Revered Preceptor's feet.

CHĀNAKYA, Raising him up by the hand—Arise, my son !

May the interstices of the toes of your feet be ever filled with the lustre of the crest-jewels of hundreds of princes ceaselessly pouring in and throwing themselves at your feet with a tremour of fear, from the Himālaya mountain (in the north) cooled by the showers of the sprays of the Heavenly River tumbling over rocks, (down) to the shore of the southern ocean lit up with the gleam of pearls shining with varying brilliancy. 19

KING—Already do I enjoy it, by the Revered Preceptor's favour. Please take your seat, Revered Sir.

They take their appropriate seats.

CHĀNAKYA—Vrishala ! Why did you send for us ?

KING—To bless me by your sight, Revered Sir.

CHĀNAKYA, with a smile—Have done with this courtesy. Never do kings send for officers without a (weighty) reason (demanding their immediate attendance.)

KING—What good does the Revered Preceptor see in countermanding the Kaumudi Festival ?

CHĀNAKYA, with a smile—To take us to task for it you sent for us.
KING—No, no, to request you to explain it to me (I sent for you.)
CHĀNAKYA—If it be so, the disciple should certainly bow to the will of the (worthy) preceptor who deserves to be requested.

KING—So it is ; no doubt as to that. But the Revered Preceptor does nothing without any reason.

CHĀNAKYA—Vrishala ! You judge aright. Chānakya does nothing without any reason even in sleep.

KING—Hence a desire to know (lit. hear) the reason makes me inquire (lit. speak.)

CHĀNAKYA—Vrishala ! Authors of works on politics speak of three forms of administration in this world, that conducted by (lit. dependent on) the king, i.e., autocratic, that conducted by the minister, i. e., ministerial and that conducted by them both, i. e., joint. Of these yours is the ministerial administration. What have you to do with inquiring into the reason of a thing ? It is we who mind it.

The king is offended. He turns away his face. Meanwhile two bards behind the stage recite verses.

FIRST BARD—

May the matchless person of Siva (ever) ward off your trouble ! —that person which makes the sky all white with (its) ashes, silvers over the dark skin of the elephant-giant with the rays of the Moon (on the head), wears a snowy wreath of (human) skulls and beams bright on account of the god's loud laugh, resembling thereby Sarad (Autumn) that makes the sky all white with the splendour of Kāśi flowers, silvers over the gray clouds with the rays of the Moon, wears a snowy wreath of Kumuda flowers and shines bright on account of Rajuhānsa birds.

Moreover—

May the eyes, looking somewhat obliquely, of Vishṇu wishing to leave the broad couch formed of the body of Śesha with the circle of hoods for pillows, ever protect you—those eyes of Vishṇu which shine with a subdued gleam (lit. dimly) on account of recent opening, which turn away for a moment from the light of jewel-lamps, which are slow in their (visual) function, which are moist with drops of water formed in the act of yawning and of the stretching of limbs, and which are very red in consequence of the (recent) termination of sleep.

21

SECOND BARD—Just as kings of beasts (i. e. lions) that are made the storehouses as it were of energy by the creator, do not brook the breaking of their jaw-bone on any account, being endowed with a high sense of their dignity, having vanquished by their might high spirited elephants that are the leaders of herds of wild elephants ; so too, imperial rulers of men that are made the storehouses, as it were, of energy by the creator, do not brook the infringement of their order, being endowed with a high sense of their dignity, having vanquished by their might haughty chiefs commanding bodies of war elephants. 22

MOREOVER—

It is not the wearing (lit. use) of ornaments etc. which makes a ruler. You alone are said to be a ruler who, let not your commands be infringed by any one (lit. others). 23

CHĀNAKAYA, to himself—The first (recital), directly panegyrising the gods Śiva and Vishṇu, refers indirectly to the autumn that has set in. But the second, what is it ? I cannot make it out. After a moment's reflection. Ah ! I see. It is the machination of Rākshasa. Wicked Rākshasa ! Kautilya is wide awake. He has found you out.

KING—Venerable Vaihīnari ! Let a thousand gold-pieces be given to (each of) these two bards.

CHAMBERLAIN—All right, My Lord, I obey.

He sets off.

CHĀNAKYA—Stop, Vaihīnari ! You are not to go.

The Chamberlain trembling looks at the king.

CHĀNAKYA—Vṛishala ! What means spending wrongly such large sums ?

KING—Since the Revered Preceptor thus puts restraint on me in all matters, king-ship becomes a bondage and no king-ship.

CHĀNAKYA—These evils befall those kings who neglect their duties. If you cannot put up with these evils, mind your duties.

KING—Here do we mind our duties.

CHĀNAKYA—Right glad we are at it.

KING—In that case we want to know the reason why the Kaumudi Festival is countermaned.

CHĀNAKYA—I also want to know the reason why the Kaumudi Festival needs be celebrated ?

KING—The prime reason is that I would have my command obeyed.

CHĀNAKYA—And my prime reason for cancelling the Kaumdūi Festival is that I could countermand your command. For,

The fact that this command of yours which is received with bent heads (lit. is borne on their heads) like a chaplet of nice flowers by hundreds of kings (of all lands) up to the shores of the four oceans skirted by forests dark with young leaves of Tamāla trees, with their waters agitated by restlessly moving sea-monsters, stops short of me, itself proclaims to the world that in your person sovereignty is beautifully blended with humility.

I shall also give you another reason, if you want it.

KING—Let us have it.

CHĀNAKYA—Śonottarā ! Tell the penman Achala in my name to give you the list of Bhadrabhaṭa and his comrades that have, in disaffection, fled hence and entered the service of Malayaketu.

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER—I obey. Going out and returning with the list. Here it is, Revered Sir !

CHĀNAKYA, taking it.—Vrishala ! Hear me.

KING—I am all attention.

CHĀNAKYA, reading the list—A list enumerating the high officials, Bhadrabhaṭa and other champions of His Majesty Chandragupta of auspicious name in the (late) war, that have, in disaffection, fled hence and entered the service of Malayaketu—Bhadrabhaṭa, the superintendent of war elephants; Purudatta, the superintendent of war-horses; Dingarāṭa, the nephew of the high chamberlain Chandrabhāṇu; Balagupta, a relation of His Majesty's, Rājasena, the attendant of His Majesty's person when he was a young Prince; Bhāgurāyana, the younger brother of General Sinhabala; Rohitāksha, a scion of the Mālava clan, and Vijayavarman, the head of the Kshatriya corps.

KING—Well, I must know the causes of their disaffection.

CHĀNAKYA—Listen to me, Vrishala ! Of these Bhadrabhaṭa and Purudatta, superintendents of elephants and horses, these two were addicted to wine, women and hunting. They were negligent in their supervision (of the corps) of elephants and horses. On that account I removed them from their posts and merely allowed them their annuities. So they left us and entered the service of Malayaketu, each in his proper capacity. The next two Dingarāṭa and Balagupta, these were blinded (lit. overpowered) by excessive greed. They deemed the annuities conferred on them by you to be insufficient. So they left us and entered the service of Malayaketu, expecting to get more from him. As to Rājasena, your personal attendant, when you were a young Prince, he feared that the great wealth consisting in elephants, horses and immense treasure which he had suddenly come by through your favour, would as suddenly be taken away from him. So he made off hence and entered the service of Malayaketu. As regards Bhāgurāyana, younger brother of General Siinhabala, he had been friends with Parvataka; so out of the love that he bore to him, he scared away Malayaketu by whispering into his ears that it was I Chānakya that had murdered his father. Hence when I punished Chandanadāsa and others who were hatching treason, he, being seized with fear on account of his guilt, fled away and entered the service of Malayaketu. The latter, imbued with gratitude for his having saved his life, conferred upon him the post of private secretary. The last two, Rohitāksha and Vijayavarman, they again were filled with overweening pride. They could not bear to see the honour bestowed by you on their cousins. So they left us and entered the service of Malayaketu. These were the causes of their disaffection.

KING—Since the causes of their disaffection were known, why did not the Revered Preceptor at once take proper measures in this case ?

CHĀNAKYA—I could not do it, Vrishala !

KING—Did you not do it from inability or for political reasons ?

CHĀNAKYA—For political reasons, of course. How could it be from inability ?

KING—Then, I want to know the political reasons.

CHĀNAKYA—Listen and learn. The measures to be taken in the case of disaffected subjects are two-fold, measures of favour and measures of punishment. Now Bhadrabhatta and Purudatta were removed from their posts. Favour to them meant their reinstatement. Had they been reinstated in spite of their weaknesses in the form of addiction to vices, it would have caused the ruin of the corps of elephants and horses that are the main stays of the empire. Dingarūta and Balagupta were beyond measure greedy. They would not be satisfied even if the whole empire were given away to them. Rājasena and Bhāgurāyana suspected us of depriving them of their life and property. How would they have received our favours ? Rohitāksha and Vijayavarman were extremely proud. They did not bear to see the honour bestowed on their cousin. What favour could be shown to them that would please them? So, the former course was not open to us. As to the latter, that too was out of question. For, if we punish severely our high officials who had been our champions in the late war, on our recent coming into power after the Nandas, we should be viewed with distrust by such of our subjects as belong to the party of the Nandas. All these disaffected officers of ours have been received into (royal) favour by Malayaketu, son of Parvataka, who, filled with rage for the murder of his father, is preparing to attack us with a very large army of Mlechchhas, under the guidance of Rākshasa. This is the time for military activities and (not for festivities). What signifies the celebration of Kaumudi Festival, when we have to improve the fortification.

KING—There is much to question in this matter.

CHĀNAKYA—Question freely. I, too, have much to say in this matter.

KING—Why did you connive at the escape of that Malayaketu, the root of all this trouble (lit. evil.)

CHĀNAKYA—Not to connive at his escape meant two courses, namely, to arrest and punish him or to give him half the kingdom promised (to his father). Had we arrested and punished him, we should have ourselves confirmed thereby the charge of having ungratefully murdered Parvataka. Had we given him half the kingdom, even that would have been (looked upon as) only wiping away the stain of ingratitude in the case of the murder of Parvataka. For these reasons, we connived at the escape of Malayaketu.

KING—That is your defence in this case. But what have you to say regarding your connivance of (the escape of) Rākshasa who had been in this very city ?

CHĀNAKYA—As to Rākshasa, he was the most trusted leader of the partisans of Nanda who appreciated his virtues ; for he had lived and moved among them so long, and had been unflinching in his devotion to the late sovereign. He had a resourceful brain and a valiant heart. He commanded a large following of friends and possessed immense treasure. So I connived at his escape with the conviction that if he remained here in the city, he would certainly create serious disturbance in the state ; but that, if he were allowed to depart, he would not be difficult to manage, though he should cause disturbance abroad.

KING—Why did you not take (proper) measures against him while he was here?

CHĀNAKYA—How can it be said that I did not do it? He was like a barb rankling (lit. lodged) in the heart. That I removed and got rid of by skilful operations.

KING—Why did you not lay hold of him by force?

CHĀNAKYA—Mind you, he is the (redoubtable) Rākshasa. If we try to lay hold of him by force, he would himself perish or work havoc in our forces. Should this happen, it would be an evil either way. Look here.

Should he pressed hard, perish (in the fight,) you would, O Vrishala, lose him. Should he, on the other hand, cut down your best warriors, that too, would be a hard thing indeed. For these reasons, it behoved us to subdue him by (proper) measures as we do a wild elephant. 25

KING—We are unable, Revered Sir, to outspeak you. But it is the Minister Rākshasa, after all, that is in every respect much to be commended.

CHĀNAKYA—‘And not you’—that is what you mean to be understood. Well, Vrishala, what has he done?

KING—Listen. That great man—

Stayed in the city as long as he liked after it was taken, causing a lot of trouble to us. He forcibly caused obstruction to our soldiers in the proclamation of victory and other things. He has besides by his grand statesmanly schemes confounded us (lit. our minds) to so great an extent that we distrust even our trusted adherents. 26

CHĀNAKYA, with a laugh—Is this all that Rākshasa has done? I, for a moment, thought that he dethroned you and made Malayaketu the supreme lord of the earth as I had dethroned Nanda and made you supreme.

KING—It was another’s doing. What share can the Revered Preceptor lay claim to therein?

CHĀNAKYA—O You malicious detractor!

Which other person publicly took the great and terrible vow of extirpating the whole race of the enemy, untying the knot of hair on the head with fingers bent at the ends on account of the burst of high fury, and slew the haughty nine Nandas that possessed ninety-nine crores of gold coins, like animals of sacrifice slaughtered one after another, in sight of Rākshasa ! 27

KING—It was the doing of Fate that has been all along inimical to the Nandas.

CHĀNAKYA—Only the unknowing believe in Fate.

KING—The knowing, again, are not boastful.

CHĀNAKYA, flying into rage—Vrishala, you mean to rate me as you would a servant !

Now my hand hastens to untie again the knot of hair that has been tied up ; my foot again stirs to subscribe to another vow. And you overtaken by your doom (lit. death) again kindle the fire of my wrath quenched by the destruction of the Nandas. 28
KING, to himself—Really, the Revered Preceptor is boiling with indignation. What to do ?

The red glow of his eye, though subdued in consequence of the eye-balls being wet with the flow of limpil tears while the eyelids move tremulously through excitement, is, as it were, again ablaze, while the gloom of the knit up eyebrows thickens, and the blow of his foot is borne with difficulty by the earth, shaking terribly, as if put in mind of Rudra exhibiting the sentiment of fury in course of his frantic dance. 29

CHĀNAKYA, resuming his coolness—Vrishala ! It is no use bandying words. If you consider Rākshasa superior to us, let this sword be given to him. He throws down the sword, leaves his seat, and fixing his gaze in the air, to himself says—Rākshasa ! this is the height of your genius trying to overreach (lit. vanquish) mine.

Ab ! all these tactics of disunion, that are presently employed by you certainly in the belief that you will thereby easily vanquish the Maurya alienated from me, will by this sham quarrel (lit. in this way) surely and certainly conspire to your own disunion from Malayaketu. 30

Exit Chānakya.

KING—Venerable Vaihīnari ! Let subjects be informed that Chandragupta himself will, hencefourth, conduct the affairs of state irrespective of Chānakya.

CHAMBERLAIN, to himself—Oh ! His Majesty calls him Chānakya without the honorific attribute. Alas ! He is removed from office. But it is no fault of His Majesty.

When the king acts improperly, it is certainly due to (some) fault of the minister. An elephant becomes vicious owing to the thoughtlessness of the driver. 31

KING—Venerable Brāhmaṇa ! Why are you hesitating ?

CHAMBERLAIN—Not in the least, My Lord. Thank God, Your Majesty is asserting Your Majesty.

KING, to himself—I hope the Revered Preceptor, who expects to achieve his object by my being viewed in this light, may gain it thereby. Aloud, Venerable Brāhmaṇa ! Make haste.

CHAMBERLAIN—I obey, My Lord.

Exit Chamberlain.

KING—Sonottara ! My head is aching on account of this harsh squabble. Therefore show us the way to the sleeping mansion.

FEMALE DOOR-KEEPER—This way, My Lord.

KING, leaving his seat—Although I slighted (in appearance) the Revered Preceptor in compliance with his (express) injunctions, I feel an inclination, as it were to sink into the bowels of the earth, (to hide my head with shame). Then how is it that those, who in reality act disrespectfully towards their guru, do not die of shame (lit. break their heart with shame) ? 32

Exeunt Omnis.

END OF ACT III.

called

THE FEIGNED QUARREL.

Act IV

THE BAIT.

There enters Karabhaka in the guise of a courier.

KARABHAKA—

Who, I wonder, would cross and recross (a distance of) more than a hundred yojanas, were it not for the pressing mandate of the master to travel without respite ? 1

Now I go and see Minister Rākshasa.—Moving forward. This is the mansion of the noble Minister Rākshasa. Looking about—Which of the door-keepers is here? Say to the noble Minister Rākshasa, that Karabhaka is come post-haste from Pātaliputra.

DOOR-KEEPER, entering—Good fellow! Speak slowly. The Minister is troubled by headache brought on by sleeplessness caused by cares of state. He is still in the sleeping chamber. Wait a while. I shall announce your arrival when I see it opportune.

KARABHAKA—My good sir, you may do so.

Then enters Rākshasa sitting care-worn in his sleeping chamber, accompanied by Śakatudāsu.

RĀKSHASA—

I have won over completely the malcontents of Chāṇakya; and yet I pass night after night without a wink of sleep on account of the great concern (that I feel) regarding how this thing here (i. e., the alienation of Chandragupta from Chāṇakya) will come about, when I reflect on the uncertainty of the favours of fate and ponder over the crooked policy of Chāṇakya. 2

And it is a dramatist or a statesman like us that has to toil hard in this way. With his ingenuity he at first lays the germs, tiny indeed, of what he undertakes. Next he looks to their development. Afterwards as these germs attain to the medial stage of growth, he causes them to bear very remote fruits hid from the views of others. Then he builds up the dubious stage. Finally he winds up (successfully) the whole thing so spread out. 3

Now to Chāṇakya.

DOOR-KEEPER, making up to Rākshasa—May victory come.

RĀKSHASA—may discomfiture come.

DOOR-KEEPER—to the minister.

RĀKSHASA, with his left eye throbbing, to himself.—‘To Chāṇakya may victory come! May discomfiture come to the minister!’—aloud. Good fellow! What do you wish to say?

DOOR-KEEPER—There is Karabhaka come from Pātaliputra who desires to see the Minister.

RĀKSHASA—Let him in immediately.

DOOR-KEEPER—I do as Your Excellency bids me—making up to Karabhaka. You may see the Minister, good fellow! Exit.

KARABHAKA, approaching Rākshasa.—Victory to Your Excellency.

RĀKSHASA—Sit down, good fellow !

KARABHAKA—I obey.—He sits down on the ground.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—There are so many errands that I do not recollect in which of them, this good fellow here, has been employed by me.—He reflects.

Then enters a servant with a staff.

SERVANT—Move away, good men, clear the road.

It is strange you do not know that even a (distant) sight of His Highness (the Prince) who is god Indra on the earth and is the home of all that is good, is forbidden to (lit. difficult to obtain by) those not blessed by Fortune, what of close proximity ?

Looking up. What do you say, good men ? Why do I tell you to clear the road ? Well, His Highness Prince Malayaketu comes this way on his visit to His Excellency Rākshasa who is troubled with headache. So I tell you to clear the road. Exit.

Then enters Malayaketu followed by Bhāgurāyanu and the Chamberlain.

MALAYAKETU, to himself with a sigh—It is ten months to-day since our father died and yet we have not offered even the libation of water to his soul (lit. to him) inspite of our boasted valour.

This was what I solemnly vowed of yore, that I should offer the libation of water to my (deceased) father after reducing the wives of my enemies to that altered condition in which my mothers had been through grief, a condition in which their jewelled bangles broke to pieces as they beat their breast, their upper garment fell off, their hair got incrusted with the dust on the ground and the air rang with the pitious and distressful cries of ‘ woe ! woe ! ’

So, to be brief,

5

I shall bear up manfully and walk in the footsteps of my fore-fathers, meeting death on the battlefield; or shall wipe dry the tears from the eyes of my mothers and cause them to flow from (lit. transfer them to) the eyes of the wives of the enemies.

—aloud. Venerable Jājali ! I wish to cause agreeable surprise to Minister Rākshasa by an unexpected private visit. So let the chiefs who attend the state processions be told in my name that they need not follow me.

CHAMBERLAIN—I carry out Your Highness's order. Turning back and looking up.—Hark ! Ye chiefs ! His Highness Prince Malayaketu orders that no one should follow him.—Observing their movements, with joy. Lo ! The chiefs stop immediately on receiving the Prince's order. Look here, my Lord !

Some chiefs rein in (lit-restrain) their horses that with their long (lit. high) necks greatly arched on account of the tightly held sharp-pointed bridles, are as it were, scraping the void in front of them with their hoofs ; while some stop short with their noble elephants standing motionless with silent bells. These chiefs do not overstep the bounds of deference, just as seas do not overstep the tidal mark. 7

MALAYAKETU—Venerable Jajali ! You may also turn back along with the palanquin-bearers. Only Bhāgurāyana should follow me.

CHAMBERLAIN—I obey, my lord

Exit Chamberlain with the palanquin-bearers.

MALAYAKETU—Friend Bhāgurāyana ! Bhadrabhaṭa and others coming over to us (lit. here) begged me to understand that they sought service under me through my commander-in-chief Śikharasena and not through Minister Rākshasa, as I was the proper person to be served on account of qualities causing men to flock to me, being filled with dislike for Chandragupta who followed the guidance of his wicked minister. I pondered over it long, but could not catch the import of their speech.

BHĀGURĀYANA—It is, my Prince, intelligible enough. One should seek service under a king that is endowed with kingly qualities and is, withal, enterprising. This he should do through the friend and well-wisher of the king. That is indeed the proper course.

MALAYAKETU—But, my friend, Rākshasa is indeed our best friend and well-wisher.

BHĀGURĀYANA—I admit it. But Rākshasa bears enmity to Chāṇakya, not to Chandragupta. So it may happen that Chandragupta, grown intolerant of Chāṇakya who is elated with success may remove him from the minister's post, and that His Excellency Rākshasa may then seek alliance with him out of his love for the Nanda family as he is the scion of that family, and out of his regard for his friends. In that event they may forfeit your Highness's confidence (in case they entered your service through Minister Rākshasa). This is the import of their speech.

MALAYAKETU—They are right. Now take us to the residence of Minister Rākshasa.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Come this way, my Prince.—Arriving at the Minister's residence. Here we are at the Minister's place. Get in, Your Highness.

MALAYAKETU—I

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—Ah, I have it.—aloud. Good fellow ! Did you see the bard Stanakalaśa in Kusumapura !

KARABHAKA—Yes, Your Excellency, I did.

MALAYAKETU, overhearing it.—Friend Bhāgurāyana ! They talk of affairs relating to Kusumapura. So we won't go in. We will rather listen (to their conversation).

For, ministers speak in one way in the presence of kings for fear of damping their spirit (lit. energy), and in another way in unreserved conversation with their own people. 8

BHĀGURĀYANA—As Your Highness commands.

RĀKSHASA—Has that affair met with success ?

KARABHAKA—By Your Excellency's favour, it has.

MALAYAKKTU—What might the affair be, my friend ?

BHĀGURĀYANA—It is difficult to say anything definitely at this stage about the affairs of the minister which are too intricate to understand. It behoves the Prince to listen attentively.

RĀKSHASA—I wish to hear all about it.

KARABHAKA—Listen to me, Your Excellency ! I was ordered by Your Excellency to go to Kusumapura and tell the bard Stanakalaśa in your name that he should incite Chandragupta against Chāṇakya with inflammatory verses whenever the latter went against the orders of the former.

RĀKSHASA—Go on.

KARABHAKA—I accordingly went to Pāṭaliputra and communicated Your Excellency's order to the bard Stanakalaśa. At that time Chandragupta, wanting to please the people regretting the destruction of the Nanda family, proclaimed the Kaumudi festival. Coming after a long time, it was greatly liked by the people (lit. citizens).

RĀKSHASA, With a sigh.—Alas ! King Nanda !

What Kaumudi festival could there be without Your Majesty, who, as the moon (on Earth) among kings, delighted the whole world, though there be the (physical) moon to cause the night-lotuses to bloom and Mauryan moon to cause the vulgar to rejoice ?

KARABHAKA—That festival, so pleasing to the people (lit. the eyes of the people), was then, countermanded by cursed Chāṇakya much against the king's wishes. At that juncture Stavakalaśa recited verses to incite Chandragupta (against Chāṇakya).

RĀKSHASA—What were they?

KARABHAKA repeats the verses, Mu. iii 22–23.

RĀKSHASA, with joy.—Well done, friend Stavakalaśa ! The seed of disunion, sown at the right time, will surely bear fruit. For Even an ordinary person would not brook being abruptly crossed in his eager pursuit of (lit. desire for) festive amusement. How then would a king, shining with (lit. possessing) superl-spiritedness par excellence brook it ?

MALAYAKETU—Quite true.

RĀKSHASA—Well, proceed.

KARABHAKA—Then Chandragupta who resented the contravention of his order, praised the superiority of Your Excellency and removed cursed Chāṇakya from his office.

MALAYAKETU—Friend Bhāgurāyaṇa ! The praise of Rākshasa's superiority discloses Chandragupta's leaning to him.

BHĀGURĀYAÑA—My Prince ! It is not the praise of Rākshasa's superiority that does it so much as the removal of the fellow Chāṇakya from his office.

RĀKSHASA—Is it merely the prohibition of the Kaumudi festival that is the cause of Chandragupta's displeasure against Chāṇakya, or is there any thing else ?

MALAYAKETU—My friend ! Why does he look for any thing else contributing to the displeasure of Chandragupta ?

BHĀGURĀYAÑA—Chāṇakya is a man of prudence. He would not rouse the anger of Chandragupta, for a flimsy thing. Chandragupta, too, has a sense of gratitude. He would not overstep the bounds of deference to Chāṇakya merely for this. The breach between Chandragupta and Chāṇakya, to be permanent, should be completely brought about by a multiform cause. That is the reason why, KARABHAKA—Yes, there is another thing conspiring to rouse the anger of Chandragupta, namely, that he connived at the escape of Prince Malayaketu and of Your Excellency.

RĀKSHASA, with joy—Friend Śakaṭadāsa ! Now Chandragupta will be completely in my power, Chandanadāsa will be set free, and you will meet your son and wife.

MALAYAKETU—What does he mean, my friend, when he says that Chandragupta will be completely in his power ?

BHĀGURĀYANA—Now that Chandragupta is dissociated from Chāṇakya, he does not want (lit. sees no reason) to set him aside. What else could he mean ?

RĀKSHASA—My good man ! Where is that fellow now, removed from his office ?

KARABHAKA—He is there, aye, in Pataliputra.

RĀKSHASA, with much uneasiness.—Is he still there ? Has he not retired to the penance forest or taken a fresh vow ?

KARABHAKA—Please your Excellency ! It is rumoured that he is to retire soon to the penance forest.

RĀKSHASA—Friend Śakaṭadāsa ! This is impossible. Look here. He who did not put up with the indignity of being unseated from the place of honour (lit. foremost seat) by the late king Nanda who was Indra incarnate on earth, how should that proud spirit pocket up an insult from the Maurya who is a king of his own making. 11

MALAYAKETU—Friend ! What object of his could he served by Chāṇakya's retiring to a penance forest or taking a fresh vow ?

BHĀGURĀYANA—It is perfectly clear. He could secure his ends only when Chāṇakya is away.

ŚAKATADĀSA—Do not take it amiss Your Excellency ! It is quite possible.

Look here, Your Excellency !

Wherfore should the Maurya king, who has planted his foot on the heads of chiefs with their locks of hair on the head illumined (lit. penetrated) by the lustre of moon-like diadems, put up with a breach of his order committed by his own people ? Thinking to himself in this way Chāṇakya, though by nature wrathful, takes not again the solemn vow, having fulfilled one by good luck ; for he has personally experienced the difficulties of the performance of homicidal rites and fears discomfiture in future. 12

RĀKSHASA—It may be so. Now let Karabhaka have rest and refreshment, go.

ŚAKAṬADĀSA—I do as you bid me.

Exit Śakataśa with Karabhaka.

RĀKSHASA—I want to pay a visit to the Prince.

MALAYAKETU, making up to him—I myself come to see the noble minister.

RĀKSHASA, observing him.—Oh ! The Prince is here. Vacating his seat—Pray, Your Highness, take this seat.

MALAYAKETU—Here I do it. The noble minister too should take his seat.

They take their proper seats.

MALAYAKETU—Is the headache of the noble minister relieved (lit. bearable) ?

RĀKSHASA—How can it be relieved so long as your title of Prince is not superceded by that of Emperor ?

MALAYAKETU—This will be an easy thing to attain, since the noble minister has undertaken to do it. The forces are already equipped for war. It is only for a little while that we remain inactive, waiting to find some weak point of the enemy.

RĀKSHASA—Why talk of delay any longer ? You may (forthwith) set out on your expedition of conquest.

MALAYAKETU—Has the noble minister found any weak point of the enemy ?

RĀKSHASA—Yes, I have.

MALAYAKETU—What is it ?

RĀKSHASA—It is no other than the ministerial weak point. Chandragupta is alienated from Chānakya.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Sir ! The ministerial weak point is no weak point.

RĀKSHASA—That the ministerial weak point is no weak point may be true of other kings, but not of Chandragupta.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Minister ! It is not so. The failings of Chānakya only caused ill feeling among the subjects of Chandragupta. Since he is removed, those who loved Chandragupta before will now love him the more.

RĀKSHASA—No, not so. There are two classes of subjects, those who championed Chandragupta and those devotedly attached to the Nanda family. Now the failings of Chāṇakya evoke the ill feeling of those who championed Chandragupta, not of those devotedly attached to the Nanda family. As to these, they are moved by ill feeling and anger against Chandragupta, since he has ungratefully slain the family of Nanda that is the family of his father. Not finding a worthy master they follow Chandragupta. Now they have in you an invader whose power to extirpate the foe is admitted on all hands. So they will soon forsake him and side with (lit. attach themselves to) your worthy self. Here you have my own instance.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Sir ! Is the ministerial weak point the only reason to attack Chandragupta, or is there any other also ?

RĀKSHASA—Of what account are many others ? This is the most important.

MALAYAKETU—How is it the most important, Noble Minister ? Is Chandragupta, in this juncture, incompetent to remedy it, by fixing the yoke of government on himself and another minister or by hearing it in person ?

RĀKSHASA—Yes, he is incompetent to do it. Under autocratic or joint administration the remedy is practicable. But Chandragupta has been all along favouring ministerial administration. He is, so to say, blind, having no experience of ordinary affairs of state. So he will not be able to remedy it. For,

Just as a very young baby, depending on the mother's breast (for nourishment), is not able to live (by itself) for a moment if weaned from the mother's breast ; in the same way an inexperienced ignorant king, depending on the minister (for counsel), is not able to act (independently) for a moment if dissociated from the minister.

MALAYAKETU, to himself.—Fortunately I am not one favouring ministerial administration.—Aloud. Even if it be so, he who attacks his enemy disabled by the ministerial weak point along with many other reasons to commence operations, is certain of success

RĀKSHASA—Your Highness may rest assured of success. For Your Highness, superior to all in prowess, leads the expedition. The city of Pāṭaliputra is attached to Nanda. Chāṇakya is estranged (lit. has turned away) from Chandragupta on account of his being dismissed from office. The Maurya is a king of yesterday (lit. a new king). And you have myself—a little confused at the reference to himself—to do the office of a guide pointing merely the way. In the present circumstances it is only the want of a word of command from you (lit. your wish), my Prince, that stands in the way of the accomplishment of our object.

MALAYAKETU—If the Noble Minister thinks it the right time for the expedition, why should we sit idle ?

Let my lordly elephants which are soṇa (red) in reality on account of red lead applied to their person, which have a very high stature, which pour down ichoral exudations, which have dark bodies, which roar very loudly and tear up banks with their tusks, scatter in a hundred directions the river which is Šoṇa in name only, which has high banks, which drops water, which has trees on its sides dark with foliage, the ripples of which murmur and the banks of which, undermined by the current, are being torn up by it.

Further,—

Let the corps of my elephants, uttering deep roaring sounds, pouring down sprays mingled with ichoral exudations and overflowing the earth, close round the city of Pāṭaliputra, just as rows of clouds, uttering deep peals of thunder, pouring down rain in torrents and inundating the earth, do the Mountain Vindhya.

16

Exit Malayaketu with Bhāgurāyaṇa.

RĀKSHASA—Who waits there ?

PRIYĀMVADAKA, entering—Command me, Your Excellency !

RĀKSHASA—Priyanivadaka ! Which of the astrologers is there at hand (lit. at the door) ?

PRIYĀMVADAKA—Kshapaṇaka—

RĀKSHASA, regarding his sight inauspicious.—What ? A Kshapaṇaka (of loathsome appearance) ?

PRIYĀMVADAKA—Jivasidhi.

RĀKSHASA—Oh, he is of irreputative appearance. Send him to me.

PRIYĀMVADAKA—I obey, your Excellency.

Exit

KSHAPAṄAKA, entering—

Follow the precept of Arhats who are the physicians that cure persons of the malady of delusion, prescribing what is bitter only in the beginning but agreeable in the end.

17

Making up to Rākshasa. May the Revered One secure salvation ! RĀKSHASA—Holy man ! Find us the day to set out on our expedition.

KSHAPANAKA, after reflecting a while.—Revered Sir, I have it. The full moon day is auspicious in all respects from noon downwards. The lunar mansion also is southerly to you marching from north to south. Moreover,

The zodiacal sign presided over by Budha (Mercury) occupies the horizon at the time of the march, there being the imminent setting of Sūra (the sun), the rising of Chandra (the moon) in full splendour and the sudden rising and setting of Ketu.

RĀKSHASA—Holy man ! The lunar day itself is objectionable.

KSHAPANAKA—Revered Sir ! The merit of a lunar day is only unitary and of a lunar mansion fourfold. But the merit of the moon is hundredfold. Such is the authoritative pronouncement of the science of stars.

So—

The appointed time of the contact of the Zodiacal sign having the planet Buddha (Mercury) to preside over it is an auspicious time. Avoid (only) the inauspicious period taken up by the Bhadra karana. Proceeding with the influence of Chandra (the moon) in your favour, you will be vastly benefited.

20

RĀKSHASA—Holy man ! Let us see if other astrologers agree.

KSHAPANAKA—The Revered Minister may do it. I will go.

RĀKSHASA—How so ? Are you angry with me, Holy Man !

KSHAPANAKA—It is not the Holy Man that is angry with you.

RĀKSHASA—Who else then ?

KSHAPANAKA—It is the worshipful deity ruling over the destinies of men that is angry. For you put faith in aliens forsaking your own people.

Exit.

RĀKSHASA—Priyamivadaka ! What is the time ?

PRIYAMIVDAKA, entering.—The sun is about to sink.

RĀKSHASA, rising from his seat.—Really the worshipful sun is about to sink. For,

The trees of the garden that, in the form of the shadows of their foliage, suffused with a deep flush, quickly turned to the Sun, getting close as the latter rose high above the mountain of Sunrise, now turn away from him as his orb sinks behind (lit. is tossed on) the mountain of Sunset. When the master loses his greatness, servants attending on him generally leave him.

Exeunt Omnis.

END OF ACT IV

called

THE BAIT.

ACT V

THE ARTFUL DRAFT

There enters Siddhārthaka taking with him a sealed letter and a casket of jewelry.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Good Heavens !

The creeper of the policy of Chāṇakya that is being watered with the water of the stream of intellect by means of water-pots of (favourable) time and place, is about to bear precious fruit in the shape of the realization of the object.

For that purpose I take this letter which revered Chāṇakya had previously got written (by Śakatadāsa) and stamped with the signet ring of minister Rākshasa as also this casket of jewelry stamped with the very same ring. I pretend to go to Pāṭaliputra. So I set out. Going a few steps and seeing a Kshapanaka—Oh ! There comes a Kshapanaka. I will bide his coming.

KSHAPANAKA, entering—

We bow to arhats who, with profound wisdom, attain to salvation in this world by paths of superlative excellence.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Holy man ! I bow to you.

KSHAPANAKA—Reverent brother ! May you secure salvation.

Observing him closely—Reverent brother ! I see you are starting on a journey.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—How do you know it, holy man ?

KSHAPĀNAKA—What is there to know ? The letter there fastened above the car tells it.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Your Holiness knows aright. I am going to another place. So, tell me, holy man, what sort of a day this is.

KSHAPĀNAKA, with a laugh.—How now ! Reverent brother, you get yourself shaved and then seek to know the lunar mansion !

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Holy man ! What harm is there, late though it be now (lit. even now) ? Tell me. If it is favourable, I shall go, otherwise turn back.

KSHAPĀNAKA—Reverent brother ! A favourable day does not count now in the matter of leaving the camp of Malayaketu.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—How is this, holy man ?

KSHAPĀNAKA—Listen to me, reverent brother ! Formerly the egress and ingress here were unchecked. But now since Ku-sumapura is near, no one that has not a passport is allowed to leave or enter the camp. So if you have a passport from Bhāgurāyaṇa you may safely go ; otherwise stay, in order that you may not be taken to the state tribunal with your hands and feet in chains by officers on guard.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Does not your Holiness know that I am Siddhār-thaka ? I am an attendant of His Excellency Rākshasa. Who has the power to stop me even though I go without the passport ?

KSHAPĀNAKA—Reverent brother ! You may be an attendant of a rākshasa or a piśacha. But there is no way for you to get out, if you have not the passport.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Bear with me, holy man, and bless my undertaking.

KSHAPĀNAKA—Go, reverent brother, I bless your undertaking. Now I must beg of Bhāgurāyaṇa a passport.

Exeunt Omnis.

HERE ENDS THE INTERLUDE.

There enters Bhagurāyaṇa accompanied by an attendant.

BHĀGURĀYANA, to himself—How strangely manifold is the policy of revered Chāṇakya !

I wonder at the ways of a statesman, that are myriad-shaped like the ways of Fate. Accordingly as it suits the purpose, these ways at times seem comprehensible, at times they are too intricate to follow; at times are full-formed and at times they show much shrinkage; at times the very germ is lost and at times it fructifies immensely.

Aloud. Bhāsuraka ! The Prince wishes that I should be near him. So have me a seat here in this pavilion of public audience.

ATTENDANT—Here it is. For you to sit down, Sir !

BHĀGURĀYANA, taking his seat—You should bring to me whoever wants to see me for a passport.

ATTENDANT—As your honour commands me. Exit.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Alas ! I have to deceive Prince Malayaketu that loves me so dearly. How hard it is ! But why !

Why should one, after having sold himself (lit. his person) unto the possessor of riches through greed of transient gain unmindful of the gentility of birth, of the sense of decency and of his own good name and self-respect, think of right or wrong, now that it (lit. he) is past the stage of reflection, and he has to do his biddings like a slave ?

Then enters Malayaketu attended by a female door-keeper.

MALAYAKETU, to himself—Perplexed by many misgivings my mind does not come to any definite opinion regarding Rākshas.

Will he through his devotion confirmed by attachment to the Nanda family, make peace with clever Maurya who is a scion of that family, now that he has discharged Chāṇakya from service ? Or will he keep his word, having a regard for our continued devotion to him ? Thus my mind is in a perpetual whirl (of doubt), as if mounted on a potter's wheel.

Aloud. Vijayā ! Where is Bhāgurāyana ?

DOOR-KEEPER—Here he is, my lord ! He provides passports to those who have to go out of the camp.

MALAYAKETU—Stand there motionless, Vijayā, till I cover his eyes with my hands while he looks the other way.

DOOR-KEEPER—I obey, my lord !

ATTENDANT, entering—Sir ! A Kshapaṇaka wants to see you for a passport.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Let him come in.

ATTENDANT—I do as you bid me sir !

Exit.

KSHAPANAKA—entering—Respected sir ! May you attain salvation. BHĀGURĀYANA, to himself—Oh ! It is Jīvasiddhi, the friend of Rākshasa. Aloud. Holy man ! You are going on some business of Rākshasa, I believe.

KSHAPANAKA, stopping his ears—I deprecate the sinful thought (of being connected with Rākshasa). I will hie me to a place where I hear not the name of Rākshasa.

BHĀGURĀYANA—You seem to be very cross with your friend. How has Rākshasa, holy man, wronged you ?

KSHAPANAKA—Respected sir ! Rākshasa has in no way wronged me. Unfortunate wretch that I am, I wrong myself.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Holy man ! You rouse my curiosity.

MALAYAKETU, to himself—And mine also.

BHĀGURĀYANA—I long to hear (what you mean by it).

MALAYAKETU, to himself—I do the same.

KSHAPANAKA—Why should you care to hear it ?

BHĀGURĀYANA—If it be a secret, let it go.

KSHAPANAKA—A secret—it is not.

BHĀGURĀYANA—If it is no secret, do tell it.

KSHAPANAKA—Respected Sir ! It is no secret. But I won't tell it to you.

BHĀGURĀYARA—Then I won't give a passport to you.

KSHAPANAKA, to himself.—He seeks to know it. It is, therefore, proper shat I tell it to him. Aloud. Since I cannot help it, I tell it to you. Listen to me, Respected Sir ! When I formerly lived in Pātaliputra, I made friends with Rākshasa, as my ill-luck would have it. Meanwhile Rākshasa secretly employed the poison-maid and killed His Majesty Parvateśvara.

MALAYAKETU, with a sigh to himself—Alas ! What do I hear ? Father done to death by Rākshasa, not by Chāṇakya ?

KSHAPANAKA—Then taking me to be the murderer, because I happened to be a friend of Rakshasa, cursed Chāṇakya banished me from the capital with disgrace. Now, too, Rākshasa, clever in all sorts of political games, proposes to do something which would banish me from the world of the living.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Holy man ! We have heard that the foul deed was committed by cursed Chāṇakya, who was unwilling to give him half the kingdom promised to him.

KSHAPĀNAKA, stopping his ears.—May Lord Buddha absolve us of sin ! Even the name of the poison-maid had not come to the ears of Chāṇakya.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Here have your passport, holy man ! Come along, make the same statement before the Prince.

MALAYAKETU, rushing forward with tears.—

Friend I heard the statement regarding the enemy, that his friend made. It rends the ears and redoubles, as it were, the distress caused by the murder of my father, even at this distance of time. 6

KSHAPĀNAKA, to himself—Oh ! cursed Malayaketu heard it (all). My purpose is served (lib. achieved). Exit.

MALAYAKETU, fixing his gaze in the air,—Rākshasa ! This turns out as it should.

Rākshasa (by name), you are in the full signification of it, a very rākshasa or demon. For you murdered my father who confided in you and entrusted every thing to you, secure in the belief that you were his friend ! And with his fall you caused tears to fall from the eyes of his relatives. 7

BHĀGURĀYANA, to himself.—There is the (express) order of Revered Chāṇakya to save (by all means) the life of Rākshasa. I shall manage it in this way. Aloud. Pray, calm down your rage. I wish respectfully to say something to Your Highness. Please sit down.

MALAYAKETU, taking his seat—What do you wish to say to me, friend ?

BHĀGURĀYANA—Please Your Highness ! The distinction of friends, foes, and neutrals in the case of persons that have to do with politics, depends upon political motives, and not on personal inclinations as is the case of ordinary people. Now at that time His Majesty Parvateśvara of auspicious name, was the sole obstacle politically in the way of Rākshasa wishing to restore Sarvārtha-siddhi; for he was stronger than Chandragupta. The great adversary of Rākshasa, therefore, was king Parvateśvara. On that account he acted towards His Majesty in this way. Under the circumstances I do not see anything like enormous guilt in this deed. Look here, Prince !

Causing friends to be classed as foes, and foes as friends agreeably to political motives, Polity endows a person with new birth, as it were, in which the memory of the relations of the previous birth is wiped away. 8

So you should not reprove Rākshasa for this, but should keep him well-disposed till you get possession of the empire of Nanda. After that the Prince is at liberty to retain or to dismiss him.

MALAYAKETU—I agree with you, friend ! You are right. For the execution of the Minister will cause (much) commotion among the other members of the body-politic, and eventually our success may be jeopardised.

ATTENDANT, entering.—Victory to your Highness. Turning to Bhāgurāyana, Sir ! Dirghachakshu, captain of the guards, begs to state that a man leaving the camp without a passport is arrested by him. He carries a letter with him. So it behoves Your Honour to inquire.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Bring him in, good fellow !

ATTENDANT—I obey you, sir !

Exit.

Then comes Siddhārthaka in fetters, with the attendant following him.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA, to himself.—I bow to the Spirit of Fidelity that is the (fostering) parent of persons of our class, turning away one's gaze (lit. face) from the merits and demerits of a mission. 9

ATTENDANT, making up to Bhāgurāyana.—Here is the man, Sir !

BHĀGURĀYANA, looking at him.—Good fellow ! Is he a newcomer or a retainer of some one here ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA.—Sir ! I am an attendant of His Excellency
Rākshasa.

BHĀGURĀYANA.—How is it then that you leave the camp without a passport ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA.—I am required to use dispatch owing to the urgency
(lit. importance) of the mission.

BHĀGURĀYANA.—What urgency of mission could there be that should force one to ignore a royal order ?

MALAYAKETU.—Friend Bhāgurāyana ! Bring the letter.

BHĀGURĀYANA, taking the letter from his hand.—Here is the letter.

Noticing the seal. The seal there reads Rākshasa.

MALAYAKETU.—Preserve the seal, unroll the scroll and show it to me.

Bhāgurāyana does so and shows the letter to the Prince.

MALAYAKETU—Reads. ‘Hail ! A certain person from a certain place begs to state to a certain high personage in a certain place as under. By ridding himself of the correspondent’s enemy the truthful one has proved his truthful character. True to his pledge he has next (lit. now) to gratify the friends of the correspondent that have from the first entered into an alliance with them, by granting to them the stipulated reward of the alliance. Won over to that extent, they will render real service to the pledger by destroying him whom they are serving. Of them some want to have the elephants of his enemy, and his treasure. Others want his land. The truthful one is not a man to forget it. However the correspondent reminds him of it. He further acknowledges the receipt of the three ornaments sent to him by the noble one. The addressee will be pleased to accept the trifling present that the correspondent sends as a ceremonial accompaniment to the letter. The trusted carrier Siddhārathaka will supply to him the oral clue.’ Whose letter is this, Bhāgurāyana !

BHĀGURĀYANA—Good fellow Siddhārathaka ! whose letter is this ?
SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Sir ! I do not know.

BHĀGURĀYANA—How so ? Knave ! You carry the letter and do not know whose it is ? Never mind all other things. Who is to have oral clue from you ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA, shaking with fear.—You, Sir.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Are we to have it ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—You, sir, have arrested me—I do not know what to say.

BHĀGURĀYANA angrily.—You will know it presently. BHĀSURAKA ! Take him away and thrash him (severely) till he confesses.

ATTENDANT—I do as you bid me, sir !—Going out with him and re-entering. Sir ! While I was thrashing the fellow, this box with a seal dropped down from under his armpit.

BHĀGURĀYANA, looking at it.—The seal on this too reads Rākshasa.

MALAYAKETU—It must be the ceremonial accompaniment to the letter. Preserve this seal too, open the box and show it to me.

Bhāgurāyana opens the box and shows it to the Prince.

MALAYAKETU, looking at it.—Ah ! This is the very ornament that I took off from my person and sent to Rākshasa ! It is clear. The addressee must be Chandragupta.

BHĀGURĀYANA—All doubt will be removed presently. Good fellow ! Thrash him again.

ATTENDANT—I do as you bid me, sir !—Going out and returning with Siddhārtha. Being thrashed (severely) the fellow says he will tell it to His Highness in person.

MALAYAKETU—So be it.

SIDDHĀRTHA, falling at the feet of the Prince.—I pray Your Highness will graciously give me an assurance of safety.

MALAYAKETU—One who is not a free agent is safe indeed. So go on, good fellow !

SIDDHĀRTHA—Your Highness will deign to listen to me. His Excellency Rākshasa gave me this letter and sent me to Chandragupta.

MALAYAKETU—I now want to learn the oral clue.

SIDDHĀRTHA—Please Your Highness ! The Minister told me that the oral message was to be as follows. ‘Chitravarman, king of Kulūta; Sīnhanāda, king of the Malayas; Pushkarāksha, king of Kāśmīra; Susheṇa, king of Sindhudesa and Meghāksha, king of the Persians, these five chiefs who are my dear friends, have been the first to enter into alliance with us. Of them the first three chiefs wish to have the territories of Malayaketu and the other two his elephants and treasure. So your Majesty has to give them what has been pledged to them just as you gave me much gratification by the dismissal of Chāṇakya.’

MALAYAKETU, to himself.—What is this ? Chitravarman and the other four are plotting against me ! It must be so. They are supremely attached to Rākshasa, and this accounts for it. ALOUD. Vijayā ! I want Minister Rākshasa.

DOOR-KEEPER—As Your Highness commands. Exit.

Then enters Rākshasa, sitting in his own tent in a thoughtful mood, with an attendant.

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—To tell the truth, my mind is not cleared of misgivings, as our forces contain several deserters of Chandragupta. For—

The army that is of proved efficiency with regard to the object to be achieved, is strengthened by reinforcements (of friends, woodmen etc.) and is free from hostile element, and at the same time is favourably disposed to the cause, brings victory ; but the leader who depends on an army which is of untried efficiency, colludes both with the friendly and the unfriendly, and is adversely disposed to the cause, suffers defeat : just as the middle term of a syllogism that is of known affirmation with regard to the major term, is strengthened by the agreement of similar cases and is free from the disagreement of dissimilar cases and at the same time is agreeable to the minor term, brings victory ; but the disputant who depends on a major term that is of unknown affirmation with regard to the major term, colludes both with similar and dissimilar cases and at the time is not agreeable to the minor term, suffers defeat.

But I need not have misgivings. For the deserters which our forces contain are these that have been previously seduced. A loud. Priyāmvadaka ! Let the chiefs that follow the Prince be informed in my name that they should proceed en route in the proposed order, now that they are drawing nearer and nearer to Kusumapura every day.

Khasa and Śabara chiefs should march in the van in military array after me. Yavana chiefs should be careful to keep to the centre along with Gāndhāra chiefs. Valiant Śaka chiefs accompanied by Hūṇa chiefs, should be in the rear. And the remaining group of chiefs, namely, the king of Kulūta etc. should post themselves about the person of Prince Malayaketu in the line of march.

PRIYĀMVADAKA—I obey, Your Excellency !

Exit.

DOOR-KEEPER, entering.—Victory to Your Excellency. His Highness wants you.

RĀKSHASA.—Good woman ! Wait a while. What ho ! Who is there ?

ATTENDANT, entering.—Command me, Your Excellency.

RĀKSHASA.—Good fellow ! Tell Śakatādāsa, it is improper to go into the presence of the Prince undressed, as His Highness has decorated us. So he should give one of the three ornaments that have been bought.

ATTENDANT.—I obey, Your Excellency—going and re-entering with an ornament. Please Your Excellency ! Here is the ornament.

RĀKSHASA, putting it on and getting up—Good woman ! Lead the way to royal quarters.

DOOR-KEEPER—Follow me, Your Excellency.

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—A post of power is a fruitful source of apprehension even to an innocent person.

In the first place the fear of the master possesses him. Then the fear of his personal attendants acts on his mind. Besides this the position of those that have risen high excites the malice of the evil-minded. The mind of the elevated apprehends a fall every moment. 12

DOOR-KEEPER, proceeding some distance.—There is His Highness, Your Excellency ! Go into the royal presence, Sir !

RĀKSHASA, observing the Prince—Aye, here he is.

Fixing his eye with all its parts motionless on the fore part of foot and yet not observing any thing particular about it on account of vacancy, he supports with (the palm of) his hand his moon-like face bent down as it were under the weight of heavy cares (lit. duties.) 13

Making up to him. Victory to Your Highness.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Minister, I bow to you. Please take this seat. Rākshasa does so.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Sir ! You are (lit. We see you) late today. We felt anxious about it.

RĀKSHASA—The affair of fixing the order of march has laid me open to reproof.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Minister, I wish to know how you fix the order of march.

RĀKSHASA—Please Your Highness. These are the directions to the chiefs that follow Your Highness. He repeats the passage ‘ Khasa and Śabara chief: ’ etc. given before (v. xi).

MALAKETU, to himself.—Ah ! Those very chiefs that are ready to serve Chandragupta by murdering me, are to be about my person ! —Aloud. Noble Sir !—Is there any one that is going to or coming from Kusumapura.

RĀKSHASA—Please Your Highness ! The need for the employment of secret agents who should proceed to and of spies who should hurry back from Pāṭaliputra is now over. Ourselves are to go there in a few days.

MALAYAKETU, to himself.—We know it.—Aloud. If it is as you say, why is this fellow sent there by the Noble Minister with a letter?

RĀKSHASA, looking at him.—Oh ! It is Siddhārthaka. What is the matter, good fellow ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—I beg to say, being beaten severely—Here he stops and looks down.

MALAYAKETU—Bhāgurāyana ! He will not tell it to his master either through fear or through shame. So you will yourself tell it to the Noble Minister.

BHĀGURĀYANA—I obey, Your Highness. Minister ! The fellow says that you sent him to Chandragupta with a letter and its oral clue.

RĀKSHASA—Did you in sooth say so, Siddhārthaka ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA, with a feeling of shame.—Yes, being beaten severely, I said so.

RĀKSHASA—it is an untruth. What will a man not say, being beaten ?

MALAYAKETU—Friend Bhāgurāyana ! Show him the letter. His servant shall state the oral clue.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Here, Minister, is the letter.

RĀKSHASA, going over it mentally.—It is the enemy's fabrication, Your Highness.

MALAYAKETU—Here is this ornament sent by the Noble Minister as a ceremonial accompaniment to the letter. So how can it be the enemy's fabrication ?

RĀKSHASA, observing closely the ornament.—Please your Highness, this is not a ceremonial accompaniment. It is the ornament sent to me by Your Highness. I gave it as present to Siddhārthaka for a highly gratifying performance of his.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Such a costly ornament, and that, too, a gracious gift of the Prince, given away to such a fellow ? (Is it possible ?)

MALAYAKETU—The noble Minister writes therein that Siddhārthaka will also give the oral clue.

RĀKSHASA—How can there be any oral clue ? The letter itself I disown.

MALAYAKETU—Whose seal is this then ?

RĀKSHASA—Cunning fabricators (of letters) can fabricate the seal as well.

BHĀGURĀYANA—Please Your Highness, the Minister is right in what he says. Well, good fellow ! Who wrote this letter ?

Siddhārthaka looks helplessly at Rakshasa and keeps silent,

BHĀGURĀYĀNA—Good fellow ! Avoid being thrashed again and answer.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Śakatadāsa wrote it, Sir !

RĀKSHASA—If written by Śakatadāsa, it is as good as written by me.

MALAYAKETU—Vijayā ! I want Śakatadāsa.

BHĀGURĀYĀNA, to himself.—The secret agents of Revered Chāṇaka should, by no means, propose anything of doubtful consequence. Let me do this—Aloud. Please Your Highness ! Śakatadāsa will never, in the presence of Minister Rākshasa, admit the writing to be his. So let another writing of his be sent for. The identity of hand will itself decide the case.

MALAYAKETU, to Vijayā.—Do so.

BHAGURĀYĀNA—Please Your Highness ! Let her also bring the signet ring.

MALAYAKETU, to Vijayā.—Bring both.

DOOR-KEEPER—As Your Highness commands me. Going out and re-entering. My Lord ! Here is a writing of Śakatadāsa and here is the signet ring.

MALAYAKETU, examining the two.—The characters are identical.
RĀKSHASA, to himself.—Aye, the characters are identical.

Can it be that Śakatadāsa, loving perishable objects and not imperishable fame, should have forgotten his loyalty to the (late) king and longed to meet his wife and children ? 14
Ah, there is no reason to doubt it.

The signet ring is constantly worn by him on his finger. Siddhārthaka is his friend. The fabricated writing here is certainly his as proved by his other writing. Evidently Śakatadāsa, longing to meet his dear relations disavowed his love to the Sovereign, entered into a league with the enemies clever in the art of causing disunion and did this vile thing. 15

MALAYAKETU, looking at Rākshasa.—Noble Minister ! You say in your letter that you acknowledge receipt of the three ornaments sent to you by the Noble One. Is this ornament one of them.—Observing closely, to himself. It is the one that my father formerly used to wear.—aloud. Noble Minister ! How did you get this ornament ?

RĀKSHASA—I got it by purchase.

MALAYAKETU—Vijayā ! Do you recognize this ornament ?

DOOR-KEEPER, Observing closely and heaving a sigh.—How should

I fail to recognize it ? His Majesty Parvateśvara of auspicious name used to wear it, please Your Highness.

MALAYAKETU, heaving a sigh.—Alas ! Father

Who were the ornament of our race ! These are the ornaments befitting you (lit.your person) who were fond of ornaments, wearing (lit. decked by) which you looked like autumnal evening twilight set with stars, your face shining like the moon. 16

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—Did he say Paravateśvara wore them ? It appears these very ornaments were sold to us by that trader who must have been employed by Chāṇakya.

MALAYAKETU—Noble Minister ! How is it possible to get by purchase ornaments which were formerly worn by my father and afterwards fell into the hands of Chandragupta ? Or it may be that,

Bargaining for higher gain, Chandragupta sold them to you, and you ruthlessly offered us as the price. 17

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—How circumstantially laid is the charge ? It will not do to deny the letter; for there is my seal affixed to it.

And how will any one believe that Śakatadāsa broke faith with me ? Then again who will ever think it possible that the Maurya king sold the ornaments for money ? So the only prosensible answer in the present case would be to plead guilty. 18

MALAYAKETU—I ask the Noble Minister—

RĀKSHASA—Ask him who is noble, Prince ! We are noble no more.

MALAYAKETU—

The Maurya is the son of your (former) master, to whom you have to tender extreme subservience ; and I am the son of your friend, who tender extreme subservience to you. He is to be obeyed by you; and I obey you. He will give you what it pleases him to give; and I receive at your hands what it pleases you to give. The post of Minister under him will be but dignified servitude; and under me it is honoured autocracy. What greater interest then could you have at heart, that should induce you to be so base ?

RĀKSHASA—That is it, My Prince ! The words of accusation themselves give the finding. Substituting the first personal pronoun for the second and vice versa he repeats.

The Maurya is the son of my (former) master to whom I must tender extreme subserviance; and you are the son of my friend to tender extreme subserviance to me; He is to be obeyed by me; and you obey me. He will give me what it pleases him to give; and you receive at my hand what it pleases me to give. The post of minister under him will be but dignified servitude ; and under you it is honoured autocracy. What greater interest could I have at Leart that should induce me to be so base ? 20

MALAYAKETU, pointing to the letter in hand and the ornament worn.—

RĀKSHASA, with a sigh.—It is the doing of Fate.

It (i. e. Fate) slew revered king Nanda our wise, noble, and appreciative master, that excellent judge of character in whose estimation (lit. affectionate regard) we were not removed from princes royal (lit. sons), notwithstanding the contemptible position of a servant susceptible of all sort of contemptuous treatment. It is the inscrutable doing of that wicked Fate frustrating human efforts. 21

*MALAYAKEIU, with rising anger.—*What ? Keeping back still ! It is the doing of Fate, not forsooth, of greed ? O you base ungrateful creature !

You formerly murdered my father who confided in you, by means of a wench whose system was fearfully charged with active posion ; and now, fie on you, you are selling us to the enemy as (so much) raw Absh, esteeming highly his (i.e. the enemy's) ministership ! 22

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—This is what they say an ulcer over a tumour.—Aloud. I am innocent of the murder of Parvatesvara.

MALAYAKETU—Who then murdered my father ?

RĀKSHASA—Ask Fate.

MALAYAKETU—I should ask Fate and not (in fact) Kshapanaka Jīvasiddhi ?

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—Confound me ! Is Jīvasiddhi also a secret agent of Chāṇakya ! Alas ! The enemies (thus) got possession of my heart too.

MALAYAKETU—Bhāsuraka ! Carry the following order to General Sikharasena. ‘ Chitravarman, king of Kulūta, Siṁhandāda, king of the Malayas, Pushkarāksha, king of Kāśmīra. Suṣṭena, king of Sindhudeśa, and Meghāksha, king of the Persians, these five chiefs, who have made friends with Rākshasa, propose, to serve Chandragupta by murdering us. Of them the first three wish to have my territories. Take them to a deep pit and bury them (alive). The other two covet my corps of elephants. Put them to death by means of an elephant.

ATTENDANT—As Your Highness commands.

Exit.

MALAYAKETU—Rākshasa ! I am not Rākshasa the unrighteous; I am Malayaketu (the righteous). Go then and serve Chandragupta wholly and solely. Look here—

I am able to make short work of Vishnugupta and Chandragupta along with you advancing on me, just as evil policy makes short work of the principles of Dharma, Artha and Kāma. 23 Bhāgurāyaṇa ! There need be no delay. Let our forces march on Kusumapura this very instant and lay seige to it.

Let columns of dust, raised by the pulverizing action of the hoofs of the horses of our armies and detached from their base, the Earth, by the shower of ichoral exudations, fall on the heads of the enemies, soiling (lit. darkening) the cheeks of Gauda women dusted white with the pollen of Lodhra flowers and discolouring the dark hue of their curly hair shining like black bees.

RĀKSHASA, with a sigh of anguish.—Woe to me ! They, too, Chitravarman and the other four chiefs are put to death. How is this ! Whatever Rākshasa does results in the destruction of friends, not of foes. Then what shall I, an unfortunate man, do ?

Shall I retire to a penance forest ? No, my revengeful mind will not be quieted by penance. Shall I follow my Lord Nanda to the other world ? No, it will be womanly to do so while the enemy is living. Shall I then fall on the forces of the enemy with the sword for my companion ? No, this also will not be proper; for my heart that has been urging me on to effect the release of Chandanadāsa will prevent me from doing it. It would be ungrateful, if it did not. 25 Exit Rākshasa.

THE ARTFUL DRAFT.

Act VI

A SHAM SUICIDE

There enters Siddhārthaka, decorated with valuable presents, in high spirits.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—

Glory to Krishna, black like a rain-cloud, that destroyed the demon Keśin ! Glory also to Chandragupta the Moon that gladdens the sight of men ! And glory above all to the policy of Revered Chāṇakya, that has perfected the work of conquest by which the enemy's cause is entirely lost ! 1

I will see my dear friend Samriddhārthaka, late as it is. Proceeding a few steps and looking forward. Here is my dear friend Samriddhārthaka. Oh, he comes this way.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—

Fortunes (only) grieve a person while he is separated from his esteemed and dearly loved friends, always causing painful remembrance in drinking bouts and in festive family gatherings. 2

I hear that my dear friend Siddhārthaka has returned from the camp of Malayaketu. I will find him out.—Proceeding a few steps and looking forward. Oh ! Here is Siddhārthaka.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA, Making up to Samriddhārthaka—I hope you are in good cheer, my dear friend ! They embrace each other.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—How can there be good cheer, when you do not come to me (lit. to my house) inspite of your early arrival today ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Kindly bear with me, friend ! No sooner did Revered Chāṇakya see me than he ordered me in those words. ' Halloo ! Siddhārthaka ! Go and report the gratifying news to His Majesty Noble Chandra.' So I reported the matter to him for which I received these right royal presents. Thence I directly hastened to your place to see my dear friend.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! If I may hear it, tell me what the gratifying news is, that you reported to His Majesty Noble Chandra.

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! Is there anything that you may not hear ? Just listen to me. Cursed Malayaketu, deluded by the tactics of Revered Chāṇakya, turned out Rākshasa and forthwith put to death the five principal Mlechchha chiefs Chitravarman and others. Then the rest, seeing that the wicked prince was thoughtless and brutal, left the camp of Malayaketu for their (own safety and returned to their) respective territories with their forces which were seized with (sudden) fear and were impatient to go. Thereupon, Bhadrabhata, Purudatta, Dingarāta, Balagupta, Rājasena, Bhāgurāyana Rohitāksha and Vijayavarman made Malayaketu captive.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! People say that Bhadrabhata and his companions, being ill-affected towards His Majesty Noble Chandra had entered the service of Malayaketu. Then how comes this ? Begun one-wise and ended otherwise like a play by a clumsy playwright !

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Inscrutable are the ways of Revered Chāṇakya, my friend, like the ways of Fate. I simply bow to them.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Well ! What happened next ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Just then, Revered Chāṇakya sallied forth with a large body of picked soldiers and captured the entire Mlechchha army that had no king (to lead.)

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Where is it, friend !

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—There it comes, where

The elephants, looking like water-bearing clouds, are roaring in high spirits, due to the ichoral exudation, and the horses, furnished with mailed equipage are bouncing, with their hind parts trembling through fear of the stroke of the whip. 3

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—That is all right, friend ! But how did Revered Chāṇakya, after having publicly resigned the Minister's post in that unmistakable manner, resume charge of that very post ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—How simple you are ! You wish to unravel the mazes of the policy of Revered Chāṇakya which even Minister Rākshasa could not do.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Where is Minister Rākshasa now, my friend ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—As for him, he immediately left the camp of Malayaketu, and retraced his steps to this city, followed by a spy named Rāmivadaka. That was what Revered Chāṇakya said.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! How is it that, after having left Pāṭaliputra with a strong resolution to recover the kingdom of Nanda, Minister Rākshasa comes back to it with his object un-achieved ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! I think it is on account of his affection for Chandanadāsa.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA—Do you then expect that Chandanadāsa will be released ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—How can there be the release of that unfortunate man ? There is the order of Revered Chāṇakya that we two should instantly take him to the place of execution and impale him.

SAMRIDDHĀRTHAKA, Angrily.—Has Revered Chāṇakya got no Chandālas (lit. executioners) that he orders us to do this wicked deed ?

SIDDHĀRTHAKA—Friend ! Who, in this world, that loves his life, would dare oppose the order of Revered Chāṇakya ? Come, along. Let us assume the guise of Chandālas and take Chandanadāsa to the place of execution.

Exeunt.

END OF THE INTERLUDE.

There enters a man with a rope in his hand.

MAN—

Glory to the rope of the policy of Chāṇakya, too strong to break on account of the intertwining of the cords of the six courses of action, and furnished with a noose formed of a series of statesmanly tactics which is ready to catch the enemy. 4

Proceeding some distance and looking about. This is the place, pointed out to Revered Chāṇakya by the spy Rtaivadaka where I should see Minister Rākshasa as ordered by Revered Chāṇakya.—

Looking forward. Ha ! Here is Minister Rākshasa. He is coming this way with his face muffled. I will hide behind these trees of the weedgrown garden and see where he takes his seat.—He goes and lies hid behind the trees.

RĀKSHASA, With tears in his eyes.—Alas ! How sad !

The goddess of sovereignty, getting nervous because deprived of her lord (lit. shelter) has sought another (lit. another family); and the people, forgetful of their love, have gone over with her, blindly following his lead as children do their re-marrying mother. Trusted adherents, too, reaping no fruit of their stalwart efforts, have given up (the yoke of) the enterprise. What else could they do ? Members of the body hold not long without the head. 5

Moreover—

Like a shameless Vrishala wench, the goddess of sovereignty, abruptly leaving her (deceased) husband king Nanda of noble lineage, has taken to the Vrishala Chandragupta and sticks fast to him. What can we do here ? Try how hard we may, Fate frustrates our efforts like an enemy. 6

For,—

When His Majesty King Nanda had gone to Heaven, cut off suddenly, I tried hard under the powerful Mountain Chief Parvataka, and when he was murdered, under his son; and yet failure has been my lot. Surely the enemy of the Nanda family is Fate and not the Brāhmaṇa Chāṇakya. 7

Fie upon the stupidity of Malayaketu !

The Mlechchha, with a mind devoid of judgment, did not, indeed perceive how I, Rākshasa, hale and whole, and still serving my master that has perished, should (ever) enter into an alliance with the enemy. Nay, there is no wonder. The mind of a man doomed to destruction by Fate, takes a perverted view of everything. 8

So even now Rākshasa will meet his death, falling into the hands of the enemy ; but he will not ally himself with Chandragupta. For it is a very great infamy to break one's faith from motives of self-interest, but none at all to be over-reached by the enemy.—Looking about with tears in his eyes. These are the parts of Kusumapura which have been rendered sacred by His Majesty King Nanda's rambles.

In this spot His Majesty formerly hit moving marks with his horse in full career, letting loose the reins in the act of stretching the bow. In that plot of the garden he halted and there he chatted. These parts of Kusumapura, now visited without them thus stealthily, deeply grieve me. 9

Now where shall I, an unfortunate man, go ? Looking about. Well I have it. Here is the weedgrown garden. I shall go there and learn the tidings of Chandanadāsa from some one. No one foresees the good and evil turns of Fate that are to befall him.

I who formerly passed out of the town leisurely like a king, surrounded by thousands of chiefs, pointed at by citizens with their fingers like the new Moon, now again enter this wretched weedgrown garden of that town hurriedly in fear and alone like a thief, frustrated in all my efforts ! 10

But the exalted sovereign by whose favour I enjoyed that honour, is no more.—Entering the garden and looking around. Oh pity ! This weedgrown garden presents a rueful sight.

Like a family the series of exploits whereof were magnificent, the mansion here, the series of structures whereof were grand, is gone (lit. overthrown). Like the heart of a good man consumed by (the sorrow for) the destruction of his friends, the lake there is dried up. Like the schemes of a statesman worked under adverse Fate, the trees are devoid of fruit. And as the mind of a witless person is possessed by evil counsels (lit. policies), the ground is covered with weeds (lit. grass). 11

Moreover,

Serpents, heaving sighs in the form of expiration, bandage with bits of slough the cuts of the branches (of trees) here, that have been hacked with large and sharp axes and are sending forth cries of pain in the shape of the incessant moan of pigeons. They do it out of compassion for them in their affliction, as they had lived with them on terms of intimacy. 12

Besides these trees,

Poor things, overpowered by calamity, appear as if resolved to repair to the cremation ground (to commit suicide by fire). They are eaten up internally by heavy grief in the shape of the canker causing the trunk to wither. Having lost the glow (of leaves) they look gloomy. 13

Now I will rest awhile on this broken stone-seat suited to my fallen fortune.—Sitting down and listening. What is this sudden noise for, that I hear ?

This sound of kettledrums, accompanied by the notes of sharp-sounding drums and conchshells, which stuns (lit. destroys) the ears of hearers overpowered by its intensity, and which is no sooner taken in than thrown up by palaces on account of its magnitude, spreads afar as if (possessed) with the curiosity of surveying the extent of space. 14

After a moment's reflection. Ah ! I understand. It tells how exultant the Royalty—Breaking off here painfully and resuming—is at the capture of Malayaketu.—With a sigh. Woe to me !

I have been made to hear the report and witness the exhibition of the enemy's sovereign power. Now, methinks the efforts of Fate would be to make me experience (the extent of) it. 15

MAN, To himself.—He is seated. I will now do as I am directed by Revered Chāṇakya. He throws the noose round his neck in sight of Rākshasa, feigning not to notice him.

RĀKSHASA, Seeing him.—What is this? That man there is hanging himself. Verily, the poor fellow must be as much distressed as I. Well, I will speak to him. Making up to him. Good man! What are you doing?

MAN, With a sigh.—Just what an unfortunate man like me, sir, could do, grieved at the death of a dear person.

RĀKSHASA, To himself.—I already guessed that the poor man was as much distressed as I.—Aloud. You are matched with me in misery. So if it be not very private or very heavy, I wish to hear it.

MAN—It is not very private, sir, nor very heavy. But I can not brook delay in (the committal of) suicide. The death of a dear friend grieves me.

RĀKSHASA, Heaving a sigh, to himself.—Woe to me. I am put to shame by this man here, since I am so very regardless of my friend's distress.—Aloud. I wish to hear it, as it is not very private nor very heavy.

MAN—You press me too much, sir! So I tell it to you. There lives a head man of (the guild of) goldsmiths named Jishṇudāsa, in this city.

RĀKSHASA, To himself.—Jishṇudāsa, I know, is the intimate friend of Chandanadāsa.

MAN—That dear friend of mine—

RĀKSHASA, With joy to himself.—Ah! He called him his dear friend. That is, he is closely connected. So he may be knowing about Chandanadāsa.

MAN—gave away what he had to the poor and left the city forthwith, wishing to burn himself alive. So I came to this weedgrown garden to hang myself up before I should hear the sad news (of his suicide).

RĀKSHASA—Why does your friend burn himself alive?

Is he stricken by terrible diseases beyond the power of drugs to cure?

MAN—No.

RĀKSHASA—

Is he undone by the wrath of the king as deadly as fire and poison?

MAN—That, too, is not the case. Chandragupta does not deal cruelly with the people.

RĀKSHASA—

Is he smitten with love for a woman inaccessible to him being another's (wife) ?

MAN—May Heaven absolve us of the sin ! He is surely not capable of such an impropriety of conduct.

RĀKSHASA—

Then has he, like you, a friend dying helplessly ? 16

MAN—It is just so, sir !

RĀKSHASA, With uneasiness, to himself.—Chandanadāsa is the dear friend of Jishṇudāsa. So the former's death must be the reason of the latter's suicide by fire. This, indeed, makes me somewhat uneasy at heart which is full of affectionate regard for him.—Aloud. Good man ! I long to hear also an account of the noble deeds of your dear friend.

MAN—An unfortunate man that I am, I can no more brook hindrance to the committal of suicide.

RĀKSHASA—Good man ! Do tell me the tale that is worth hearing.

MAN—Since I can not help it, I tell it to you. Hear me.

RĀKSHASA—Good man ! I am all attention.

MAN—There lives one, Chandanadāsa by name, in the Flower Square of this city, who is the head of the guild of pearl-merchants.

RĀKSHASA, In anguish, to himself.—Here are opened the flood-gates of my misery by Fate. Now muster up your fortitude, my heart ! For you have in store something very painful to hear. Aloud. Yes, good man ! He is reported to be a staunch friend, noble soul. What of him ?

MAN—He is the dear friend of this Jishṇudāsa.

RĀKSHASA—Well, go on.

MAN—So Jishṇudāsa made this request to Chandragupta today as befitted a loving friend.

RĀKSHASA—What is it ?

MAN—‘May it please Your Majesty, I have money just sufficient for ransom. Pray, release my dear friend Chandanadāsa in exchange of that.’

RĀKSHASA, To himself.—Well done, Jishṇudāsa ! You have shown your love for your friend.

That wealth for which sons kill their parents and parents their sons like aliens, and for which friends disown friendship (unto their friends), is without a moment's hesitation, offered to be given away by you in your friend's hour of difficulty. This wealth of yours is put to good use. Belonging to the trading class you are a good trader.

—Aloud. When thus addressed, what did the Maurya say in reply ?
 MAN—On his being thus addressed Chandragupta said to Jishṇudāsa :—‘ We imprison Chandanadāsa not because we want money, but because he does not give up the family of Minister Rākshasa that he has kept concealed somewhere, though we repeatedly ask him to do so. If he gives it up, he gets release. Otherwise he suffers death ’. No sooner did he say this than he ordered Chandanadāsa to be taken to the place of execution. Then Jishṇudāsa left the town saying to himself ‘ I will enter fire before I hear of the sad end of my friend Chandanadāsa.’

RĀKSHASA—Is then Chandanadāsa impaled already ?

MAN—No, he is yet to be impaled. Again and again they ask him in his last hour (lit. now) to surrender the family of Minister Rākshasa; again and again he refuses it, staunch in his affection to his friend; and thus (lit. on this account) his end (lit. death) is delayed.

RĀKSHASA, With admiration to himself.—

Bravo, Chandanadāsa ! You, too, my noble friend who have proved the refuge of the destitute, have won the fame which Śibi did, resulting from the protection of those seeking shelter.

—Aloud. Go quick, good man and prevent Jishṇudāsa from entering fire. I will rescue Chandanadāsa from (the jaws of) death.

MAN—By what means, sir, will you rescue Chandanadāsa ?

RĀKSHASA, Drawing his sword.—By means of this, the friend of enterprise.

This sword that resembles in hue the cloudless sky, that shows as it were lines of hair standing on ends from a love of fighting in the form of streaks of superior radiance, that has proved its strength to the enemies in the test of battles on account of its surpassing excellence, this companion of my (right) arm prompts me, who am beside myself with love for my friend, to this daring deed.

MAN—I am not able, sir, to say positively whether you are the noble Minister Rākshasa whose name is auspicious to utter, although the preservation of the life of the head pearl-merchant Chandanadāsa reveals you as such, since you are fallen in adverse circumstances. So do me the favour of removing the doubt.—He falls at the feet of Rākshasa.

RĀKSHASA—Good man ! I am that Rākshasa in the real sense of the word, who saw with my own eyes the destruction of my sovereign, brought my friend into troubles, got the epithet of ‘ base ’ and made my name too inauspicious to utter.

MAN, Again falling at his feet, with joy.—Bless me God, I am happy (to have met you).

RĀKSHASA—Get up, good man ! Make no delay and tell Jishṇudāsa that Rākshasa rescues Chandanadāsa from (the jaws of) death this very instant.

He sets off with his drawn sword repeating ‘ This sword that resembles ’ etc.

MAN—I beg your favour, Noble Minister ! I have (lit. here is) some thing (to tell you). Formerly, cursed Chandragupta had ordered Śakaṭadāsa to be executed. He was carried off from the place of execution by some one and taken abroad. Thereupon cursed Chandragupta quenched the blazing fire of his anger against noble Śakaṭadāsa with the blood (lit. death) of executioners who were asked to explain why they were negligent. Since then if they see any stranger with a sword behind or before, they at once dispatch the criminal, anxious about their own safety, even before reaching the place of execution. So, if the Noble Minister goes sword in hand, he will hasten the end of the headman Chandanadāsa.

Exit.

RĀKSHASA—How difficult of comprehension is the course of the policy of this fellow Chāṇakya ?

If Śakaṭadāsa was in sooth conducted to me by that enemy’s accredited agent, why did he, in anger, put the executioners to death ? If that was not the case, how could he possibly get up that (fabricated) letter ? Making speculations upon speculations in this way, my mind comes to no decision. 20

Musing awhile.

This is not the time to use the sword ; for, in that case executioners execute the sentence early. Political schemes bear fruit after a lapse of time. Of what avail are they here ? It is not proper to observe an attitude of indifference ; for, my dear friend incurs this terrible death on my account. Oh, I see, I will offer my person to redeem him.—

He flings away his sword.—Exit.

END OF ACT VI

called

A SHAM SUICIDE.

ACT VII

THE PACT OF PEACE

There enters the executioner Vajraloman.

VAJRALOMAN—Away, Sirs, away. Keep off.

Lack-a-day ! If you wish to save your life, your property, your wife, and your family, keep far away from the politically unwholesome which is as fatal as poison. 1

Moreover,

If a man partakes of the physiologically unwholesome, he (himself) falls ill or dies. But if one partakes of the politically unwholesome, the whole family dies. 2

If you doubt the truth of it, lo ! there comes Chandanadāsa. He is being taken to the place of execution for doing what is politically unwholesome. Looking up—what do you say, sirs ? You ask me if he has any means of release. Yes, he has, if he would give up the family of Minister Rākshasa. Looking up again—what do you say ? ‘Cherishing a regard for those who seek his protection he would not do this foul deed to save himself.’—Then know for certain, sirs, that he suffers death. What signifies your anxious enquiries after remedial measures ?

Then enters Chandanadāsa in the garb of one to be executed, carrying the pale on his shoulder, with his wife and son following him, attended by the executioner Bilvavaktra.

Wife, with tears in her eyes.—Fie !

A bow of contempt to Yama that makes one in our family die the death of a thief, although we are always fearful of the least violation of propriety. 3

Yes, the wicked make no distinction between those who remain aloof from wrongs and those who commit wrongs. Otherwise—

Why should hunters, O fie on them, cherish an obstinate desire to kill the innocent deer that lives on grass renouncing meat for fear of death ? 4

Looking around. I pray, Jishṇudāsa, how is it that you do not answer ? Alas, at such a time (as this) persons standing by (lit. within sight) are, indeed, hard to find.

CHANDANADĀSA, with a sigh.—There he is, my esteemed and beloved friend. Turning his woe-begone face he follows me (still) with his eyes full of tears, while dragging his body homeward.

BILVAVAKTRA—Mr. Chandanadasa ! You are at the place of execution. So tell your people to retire.

CHANDHNAḌĀSA—Noble lady ! Turn back, taking the boy with you. It is not proper to follow further.

WIFE, with a sigh.—My noble lord ! You proceed to the other world, not to another land. This is not the time for a well-bred wife to turn back.

CHANDANADĀSA—And what is your resolve, noble lady ?

WIFE—It is to bless myself by following the footsteps of my lord.

CHANDANADĀSA—Noble lady ! It is not a wise resolve, You have to kindly look after this boy. He is inexperienced.

WIFE—May the tutelary gods of the family kindly look after him ! Here, my boy, make obeisance to your father for the last time.

SON, falling at the feet of Chandanadasa.—What shall I do now, father, that am to be fatherless !

CHANDANADĀSA—You shall live in a land without Chānakya.

BILVAVAKTRA—Mr. Chandanadasa ! The post is set up. Get ready now.

WIFE—O, for chivalrous souls to save us !

CHANDANADĀSA—Now why do you cry, noble lady ? His Majesty king Nanda who had compassion for persons in distress, is gone—gone to the other world.

VAJRALOMAN—I say, Billavatta, seize Chandanadasa. His people will, of themselves, retire.

BILVAVAKTRA—Here I do it, Vajjalomā.

CHANDANADĀSA—Good fellow ! Wait a while. Let me embrace my son. Embracing him and smelling him on the head.—Since death is certain, you shall meet it, my son, without swerving from your devotion to the friend's cause.

SON—Do I require to be told this ? It is our family creed, father !

VAJRALOMAN—Now seize him, I say.

The executioners seize Chandanadāsa.

WIFE, beating her breast—O, for chivalrous souls to save us !

RĀKSHASA, pushing aside the screen and entering.—Fear not, lady, fear not. O, you executioners ! Don't you put Chandanadāsa to death.

Let the victim's garland, which is the (high) road (leading) to the realm of Yama, be placed round the neck of me here, who formerly witnessed the destruction of my sovereign's family as if it were an enemy's family, who remained at ease in the day of my noble friend's misery as if it were a day of grand festivity, and who held his life dear although subjected to the ignominy of circumvention. 5

CHANDANADĀSA, seeing him with a sigh—Minister ! What is this !—

RĀKSHASA—An imitation, in part, of your noble deed.

CHANDANADĀSA—What have you done ? You have rendered all my toil and trouble abortive.

RĀKSHASA—I am (simply) serving my purpose. Don't you, friend, blame me. Well, good fellow ! Report to wicked Chāṇakya.

VAJRALOMAN—What shall I report ?

RĀKSHASA—

Here I am, the man on whose account he deemed worthy of execution a person who is worthy of adoration, who has very much dwarfed the fame of Śibi, having acquired greater fame by saving another at the cost of his own life even in this evil Kali age when human proclivities have been vitiated, and owing to his surpassing excellence has eclipsed the noble achievements of Buddhas by his nobler deeds. 6

VAJRALOMAN—I say, Billavattā ! Take Chandanadāsa with you and wait for a time under the shade of the tree yonder on the burning ground while I report to Revered Chāṇakya that Minister Rākshasa is captured.

BILVAVĀKTRA—All right, Vajjaloma. Let it be as you say, He goes taking with him Chandanadasa accompanied by his wife and son.

VAJRALOMAN—Come on, Minister ! Proceeding some distance with Rākshasa.—Which of the door-keepers is here? Report to revered Chāṇakya who has destroyed the Nanda family and established the Maurya family—RĀKSHASA, to himself—Woe to me ! Even this I have to hear.

VAJRALOMAN—That Minister Rākshasa whose schemes have all been frustrated by the tactics of the Revered One, is captured.

Then enters Chāṇakya with his face only visible, the rest of his body being wrapped in a fine coat of mail.

CHĀṇAKYA—Good man !

Who bundled up the fire glowing red with its circle of big flames forthwith in a piece of cloth ? Who held fast the ever moving wind by means of meshes ? Who shut up in a cage the lion with his mane smelling of the ichoral exudation of elephants ? Who stemmed with a pair of arms the fearful ocean teaming with crocodiles and other marine animals ? 7

VAJRALOMAN—Your revered self proficient in statecraft did it, surely.

CHĀṇAKYA—Not so, say rather Fate did it, hostile to the Nanda family.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—O, here I see before me vile, no, no, (I must say) noble Kautilya.

He is the mine of all branches of knowledge (lit. sciences) as the ocean is of pearls. My spite only makes me hold his merits cheap. 8

CHĀṇAKYA, seeing Rākshasa, with joy.—Here is Minister Rākshasa, that great man

Who troubled so long the Mauryan army with the heavy strain of military equipment, and my brain with that of devising schemes, causing continued wakefulness (to the army and to me).9

Doffing the coat of mail and making up to Rākshasa—Minister Rākshasa ! Vishṇugupta bows to you.

RĀKSHASA, to himself.—The title of ‘ Minister ’ is now a mockery (lit. a thing to be ashamed of)—aloud. Please do not touch me, Vishṇugupta ! I am defiled by the touch of chandālas.

CHĀṇAKYA—Minister Rākshasa ! This man here is not a chandāla. He is a servant of the king. His name is Siddhārthaka. You know him. It was he who, in the garb of friendship, got that fictitious letter written by Śakaṭadāsa who, poor fellow, knew nothing about it. The other man there is also a servant of the king. His name is Samriddhārthaka.

RĀKSHASA, To himself—Luckily my mind is purged of the suspicion about Śakatadāsa.

CHĀNAKYA—To make a long story short,

Those malcontents headed by Bhadrabhaṭa, that fabricated letter, that rescuer Siddhārthaka, those three ornaments on sale, that Kshapanaka friend of yours, that person of the weedgrown garden sunk in distress and that terrible persecution of the head pearl-merchant, all this was devised by the Vṛishala longing to meet you, brave man !

10

And here comes Vṛishala to see you.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—I cannot help it. See him I must.

Then enters the king with the retinue about him.

KING, To himself—Since the Revered Preceptor vanquished, without so much as striking a blow, the forces of the enemy which were so formidable, I feel in a way abashed.

My arrows, with their heads bent down, as it were, with grief, being put to shame by the achievement of the (wished for) result without their agency, have to observe perpetually the vow of lying in the quiver.

But I must not say so.

One is surely able to vanquish those who are to be vanquished on earth with his bow unstrung, if his Revered Preceptor, vigilant in all matters, keeps wide awake in all matters of state.

Making up to Chānakya—Revered Sir ! Chandragupta bows to you.

CHĀNAKYA—Vṛishala ! All the blessings pronounced on you gather fruit to day. For here comes Minister Rākshasa.

KING, making up to Rākshasa,—Revered Sir ! Chandragupta bows to you.

RĀKSHASA, looking at him, to himself—O, this is that Chandragupta who—

Has in due course attained to sovereignty as an elephant does to the leadership of the herd, his surpassing greatness having been presaged even when he was young.

13

Aloud. Victory to Your Majestly.

KING—Revered Sir !

Say (lit. think) which part of the world would not be conquered by me now that you who are a veritable Brihaspati in politics, would vigilantly look after the affairs of state ?

Rākshasa, to himself—The disciple of Kauṭilya refers to me as one in his service. (What could he mean ?). O, it is but the courtesy of Chandragupta. My spite makes me take it otherwise. The fame that Chāṇakya has won is (fully) justified. For—

Even a thick-headed minister, coming by a good king possessed of heroic qualities, is sure to win fame. But coming by a bad king, even an unerring minister falls, with the fall of the king whose support he has sought, after the manner of a tree growing on the bank of a river. 15

CHĀNAKYA—Minister Rākshasa ! You wish that Chandanāsa should live ?

RĀKSHASA—undoubtedly, Vishnugupta.

CHĀNAKYA—Then take this sword.

RĀKSHASA—No, Vishnugupta, it cannot be. I am not fit to wield the sword, and that too the one which you wield.

CHĀNAKYA—Minister Rākshasa ! That I am fit and not you, how can it be ? Just look,

O man of talent, at the elephants deprived of the pleasures of bathing, eating, sporting, drinking and sleeping according to their liking, that have their backs swollen on account of the (constant) furnishing of military accoutrement, along with the horses kept bridled and saddled incessantly and on that account emaciated, all through (fear of) your great prowess (it. greatness of your prowess) that has humbled the pride of haughty adversaries. 1

But why all this ? Unless you take this sword, Chandanāsa dies.

RĀKSHASA—Well, Vishnugupta, I am agreeable, I yield to the affection for a friend that compels me to accede to anything and everything.

CHĀNAKYA, delivering the sword to Rākshasa with joy.—Vrishala ! I congratulate you on Minister Rākshasa showing regard to you and accepting the sword.

KING—Chandragupta is fully alive to the kindness of the Revered Minister.

ATTENDANT entering—Victory to Your Majesty. Revered Sir ! There is Malayaketu at the gate in chains, accompanied by Bhadra-bhāṭa and others.

CHĀNAKYA—Good fellow ! Speak to Minister Rakshasa. He minds these things henceforth.

RĀKSHASA, to himself—What is to be done now? He is made captive, and I am made to advise, by Kauṭilya. There is no help. Aloud. Please Your Majesty. It is known to you that I lived at the court of Malayaketu for some months (lit. time). So let his life be spared.

The king looks at Chāṇakya (signifying assent).

CHĀNAKYA—Yes, Vrishala, this request of Minister Rākshasa which is the very first, deserves to be granted. To the attendant—Good fellow! Say to Bhadrabhaṭa and others, that advised by Minister Rākshasa, His Majesty Chandragupta gives back to Malayaketu the kingdom that he had inherited from his father.

ATTENDANT—As His Majesty Commands. He sets off.

CHĀNAKYA—Stay a while, good fellow. So they should go with him and return after his reinstatement. Also tell Vijayapāla, the governor of the castle, that His Majesty Chandragupta, highly pleased at Minister Rākshasa's accepting the (ministerial) sword, orders that Chandanadāsa, the headman of the guild of pearl-merchants, be made the paramount headman of the guilds of all townships in the empire. Moreover,

Let all be set free, including war-horses and war-elephants.

Where is the use of these, now that Rākshasa is our minister? 17

ATTENDANT—As His Majesty commands.

Exit.

CHĀNAKYA—Now King Chandragupta and Minister Rākshasa! Tell me what good I may do to you beyond this.

KING—What good is there beyond this?

RĀKSHASA—If, however, you be not satisfied, bless this wish,

May our Lord Avantivarman, that is the self-begotten God Vishṇu who having assumed the form of the Boar proper for the work of preservation, supported the earth submerged in the (watery) deluge on the tip of his tusk in former times, and who, having assumed the form of our Sovereign, now afforded protection to the earth oppressed by the Mlechchhas by his pair of arms, may that King, whose relations and dependents roll in riches, long gladden the Earth! 18

N. B. — In the quotations given above I have taken the liberty to correct what looked like mistakes. To these extracts may be added one from काव्यमीमांसा. The king, the queen and their enemy are here called शर्मगुम, श्रुवस्त्रामिनी and खशाधिपति which seem to bear some resemblance to the names रामगुम, ध्रुवदेवी and शकपति. The scene, however, is laid in हिमालय, not रंतक. I give the passage below.
