FOREWORD

FORTY years ago Lord Acton wrote a Foreword to my Annals of Politics and Culture, 1492-1899, a work now out of print. Public events, he declared, were the foundation of history ; but it derived its best virtue from regions beyond the sphere of State. Justice, he continued, must be done to its several elements, to thought as well as action, to the mass of influences which constitute opinion and govern the life of nations and the progress of civilization. His writings, fragmentary though they are, breathe the same conviction that history is the record and interpretation of the life of humanity. Goethe, declared Matthew Arnold in a celebrated phrase, saw life steadily and saw it whole. The historian must try to follow his example. Homo sum : humani nihil a me alienum puto. Though we all have our preferences and scholars must specialise, we must never forget that the stuff of history is the whole field of human experience. Its subject is the making of civilization, the ascent of man.

How it is to be interpreted is a problem that each of us must decide for himself. History, as Froude used to say, is a child's box of letters : you can spell with them any word you will. The best preparation for the task is the recognition that it must be studied in all its length, in all its breadth, in all its depth. Nothing less will give us the perspective and the insight we need. Dr. Steinberg has compiled this extremely useful work in the belief that civilization is a co-operative achievement and a common heritage. To cast one's eye down the column headed Cultural Life is to realise the width of his studies and interests. Peoples are connected with one another by a network of contacts and obligations, visible and invisible. The older the world grows, the greater the debt of each to all and of all to each. Every one of us is a citizen of the world : each nation is a branch of the human tree. Geographical, racial and linguistic barriers blur but cannot destroy the fundamental unity of mankind.

In presenting the life of man as a whole in so far as this is possible in the bare bones of historical tables, the author is merely holding up the mirror to the past. The flesh to cover the bones is conveniently supplied by the Cambridge Ancient, Medieval, and Modern Histories, happily completed at last. There is no propaganda either in the selection of his material or in the recesses of his mind. He has written history elsewhere, but he is not writing it here. He is merely aiding teachers, students and the general reader to discover or recall what was going on in a given age in various parts of the world and in different fields of activity. It is not a book to be read through and put back on our shelves, but an indispensable companion to be kept on the table. It should prove of the greatest value in schools and colleges, and when the days of examinations are over it will remain within reach. For who can keep in mind the dates, the details and the sequences even of the most important transactions from the rise of the Roman Empire to the end of 1938? No work of precisely this character, so far as I am aware, is available for English readers. In my opinion the author has successfully achieved his purpose of filling the gap.

PREFACE

THE Foreword by Dr. G. P. Gooch has introduced the reader to the general aims of the present book, so that the author can confine himself to a few notes on some technical details.

As the Historical Tables will probably be used chiefly by Anglo-Saxon students, the history of the British Commonwealth and that of the United States have been given a slight predominance, without, however, upsetting the balance, and distorting the relative importance, of historical facts. It need scarcely be emphasized that the author could not go back to the primary sources in each instance ; but he has always tried to avail himself of the best authorities.

Apart from the sections dealing with the Great War, six columns have been provided for every period. For the greater part of the book, the left-hand pages deal chiefly with the relations of the Powers. The three columns on the right-hand pages are given to what may be described as home affairs and the history of civilization ; i.e. constitutional, economic, spiritual, and intellectual activities. All entries which do not expressly mention another country refer to England or, after 1707, Great Britain. This arrangement is, of course, open to criticism in many cases, since political, constitutional, and economic events have always influenced each other. The author therefore asks the reader always to regard the six columns as a unit which has been broken up only for convenience sake.

The arrangement of the first ten or twelve pages has been made on different lines. It is meant to show the gradual absorption of the Roman Empire by the Papacy, the Islamic states, and the Teutonic tribes, up to the revival of the Western Empire under Charlemagne, and the first shaping of what was to become the kingdom of England, under Egbert of Wessex. Similarly the period following the Great War has been presented in a way different from that used for the bulk of the book. Since it is as yet impossible to pass a fair judgement on the greater or lesser importance of contemporary events, the author has confined himself to the rôle of an annalist who simply enumerates the major occurrences as he sees them.

Other changes of smaller significance explain themselves as being necessitated by the historical development itself ; e.g. the change of the heading ' Islam and Asia ' to ' Countries Oversea ', from the age of discovery onward ; and the abandonment of a special section for ' Ecclesiastical History ' after the close of the Thirty Years' War.

The New Style has been uniformly adopted for all dates after its introduction by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582, regardless of its reluctant acceptance in non-Roman countries which extended over almost two centuries. Two exceptions, however, have been deliberately conceded, as their dates are commonly known in the Old Style, namely, the deaths of Mary Queen of Scots and Queen Elizabeth. Should there be found other deviations from the above rule, the benevolent critic will perhaps attribute them to the negligence of some authors who omitted to mention which style they had adopted.

In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, inventions and discoveries in the sphere of Natural Science which have more or less immediately influenced economic, and sometimes even political, history, have been brought under the heading of ' Economic History ', whereas scientific progress on purely philosophical or academic lines has been kept under ' Cultural Life ' as before.

It is with great pleasure that I here acknowledge my profound gratitude to all those friends who unhesitatingly gave much time and thought to assist me in rendering the present work as reliable and useful as possible. The responsibility for its shortcomings must rest with me alone. First of all, I am deeply indebted to Dr. G. P. Gooch, who during these ten or twelve years has given me a great many proofs of his kindness, and encouraged the present book from its beginning. Furthermore, Professor F. J. C. Hearnshaw, LL.D., Litt.D., and John T. Richardson, Junior Assistant Librarian of the Institute of Historical Research, London University, who kindly read the proofs with me ; Walter Hasenclever, LL.D., of the Phillips Andover Academy, Andover, Mass., who supervised the sections dealing with American history ; R. Samuel, D.Ph., Ph.D., of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, who advised me as to German literature ; Miss H. C. Graef, London, who helped me in compiling the sections on English literature ; and others who provided me with useful suggestions and criticisms.
